PASSION PLAYS

Cupidity

Anyone who thinks Valentine's Day is for suckers might've been convinced otherwise by the American Repertory Theater's Love Letters to the A.R.T., held at the Back Bay Events Center.

To begin with, the hokey touches—balloons, red decor and heart-shaped hors d'oeuvres—were justified by their beautiful execution, and the event attracted the likes of iconic actress Karen Allen, singer/songwriter Sally Taylor (the wildly talented offspring of Carly Simon and Sweet Baby James), her husband, reformed male model Dean Bragonier, the sexiest widow this side of the Pecos, Joan Parker, theatrical trailblazer Oskar Eustis, System of a Down frontman Serj Tankian, the A.R.T.'s Thing One and Thing Three—Bob Brustein and Diane Paulus—sex on legs and two-time Tony nominee Gavin Creel (who obliged yours truly by goosing master of ceremonies Jared Bowen) and any number of drama queens, kings and lovers, who mixed, mingled and flirted shamelessly.

Dinner was punctuated by performances of a romantic nature, including the recitation of love letters and enough carnal innuendo to fuel an English sex farce. In fact, if anyone there didn't get laid that night, he or she better have a good excuse.

Gone Skiin'

A gap has been filled in the winter social calendar of the young and the guest list, some of whom came from as far away as New York for the Boston Winter Ball. A black-tie smackdown held at the Fairmont Copley Plaza to benefit Children's Hospital Boston, it attracted an astonishingly good-looking assemblage of leggy beauties, trustafarians and recent college grads.

Present and accounted for: good-time guy Mike Huffstetler, Miami party boy Sam Siegel, New York junior socialites Carolyn Wilde and Kristine Mackenzie, brunette bombshell Whitney Burbank and the plaid-clad David Dingman, the gainfully unemployed Jake Pelletier, latter-day Jacqueline Smith Jenny Lawhorn and lots of people who looked like extras on Gossip Girl. The only no-show: life of the party Ali Torabi, who was busy skiing in Aspen, so his friends put a life-size cardboard cutout of him by the bar.

Mid-Century Modern

Gavin Creel at Love Letters to the A.R.T.

Teresa Adam and Bill Deacon at the Crystal Ball

Cameron Stowe at Feast of Music

Four Seasons. There were more bobby pins in that ballroom than you could shake a martini at. Among the admirers of the era, when getting bombed at work was considered essential to the creative process, were such party peeps as art dealer Charlotte Riggs and the dashing Brendan Hall, handsome scamp Bill Deacon, the statuesque Teresa Adam, 15-501 dwellers Mike and Allyson Tarson, numerous other Don and Betty Draper manques, and one guy who looked more like a Hassidic Jew than an Eisenhower-era advertising executive. The evening's funniest exchange: "Your hair looks amazing! Does it hurt?"

"No, but I wish I owned stock in Aqua Net."

And I'm the Duke of Westminster

It's impossible to imagine a more elegant evening than Feast of Music: the black-tie hoedown to benefit the New England Conservatory. Following cocktails, guests were ushered into the ballroom of the Fairmont Copley Plaza, which looked like an English garden in June. (As one guest put it: "This is better than the flower show.") A feast of English food (only good) was accompanied by British-inspired performances that ranged from Gilbert and Sullivan and Sir Edward Elgar to a piano duet that sounded like someone put George Gershwin in a blender with the Beatles, assorted nursery rhymes and the "Battle Hymn of the Republic."

On hand for the festivities were Staples founder Tom Stemberg and the always stunning Katherine Chapman, Beacon Hill homeys Miguel and Suki de Braganca, lovely laugh-riot Pam Lazarus and her other half, Nick, British consul to Boston Phil Budden and his American-born wife, Deborah, piano man Cameron Stowe, department store heiress Hope Baker, junior socialite Ashley Wisneski and her father, Frank, his new bride, Lynn Dale, Anna Karenina reincarnation Rita Rudyak, tall drink of water Gerrit Peterson, and dashing architect Juan Guillermo Uribe Rubio (try saying that three times fast). After dinner, guests repaired to the Oval Room to dance the night away to the Bo Winokur Orchestra (full disclosure: He played at my bar mitzvah). The evening's funniest remark: "I have a Lhasa apso, which are supposed to be reincarnations of the Dalai Lama. So when he takes a shit in the corner, he gets royal dispensation." ×××

The IMPROPER

It's All Fun and Games

Through a happy combination of childhood obesity and whining, I managed to avoid organized sports until the sixth grade. But then Mr. Lang the rugby coach inexplicably mistook my fat for potential. Practice took place on the school's lower playing field, a Passchendaele of alluvial sludge and donkey crap that was probably excellent for cultivating typhoid, but that clotted onto our cleats to add several extra pounds of drag. After squelching once around the perimeter, I found myself lolling in the back with the other disfavored specimens—the boys who, compared to the natural athletes, looked either like dead ferrets or parboiled hams. We spent the rest of the hour shuffling up and down the pitch, trying to avoid contact with the ball and pretending to know what was happening. Mr. Lang kept blowing a whistle and yelling, but this just worsened our shell shock. Then it started to rain.

This idiocy went on twice a week and on Saturdays, when I could've been better employed watching Thundarr the Barbarian. Obviously, I hated every minute of it.

They tell us sport builds character. Yes, a despicable one. Sport's foremost lesson is that victory goes to the strong, or to the cheat. It teaches you to lie to avoid away games, thus fraying your moral fiber. It sets up the coach as a tyrant and demands blinkered obedience. It's pure Hobbesian wickedness.

That said, it can be fun to watch other people play. Hence 98.5 the Sports Hub's Tony Massarotti's insights into the character of Red Sox star Adrian Gonzalez, and Ezra's cheeky guide to the baseball season.

"Best Bridal Hair & Make-Up"

Why We're Doing An Entire Ad About Our Cheeses.

(and why your typical pizza place never would.)

There's a lot about their cheese that big pizza chains don't want you to know. Like how they use cheap blends then goop it on extra heavy to make up for the blandness.

At Upper Crust, we use the finest, most flavor intense cheeses so a little goes a long way. Like authentic Parmigiano-Reggiano. And 100% mozzarella fior di latte. And a select, imported Asiago.

Yes, we're cheese lovers. In fact, we love it so much we wouldn't think of serving anything but the best.

Our Asiago is sharp, aged six months—not just one or two.

Fresh, Mozzarella fior di latte of Italy. (From whole cow's milk, not skimmed.)

No ordinary bleu cheese, ours is made from cow's milk for extra creaminess & deeper flavor profile.

We tend to get a little obsessed with sourcing and preparing each of our cheeses because we think cheese is the heart and soul of a pizza.

If you tend to agree, read on.

IMPORTED FROM ITALY, NOT DENVER.

Amazingly, nearly half of our national milk supply goes to manufacturing cheese! And much of that goes to the giant pizza chains who get most of their mozzarella from an industrial cheese complex in Denver.

We take a different approach.

We look for the best, even though it costs more. Like genuine Parmigiano-Reggiano from Italy. Or fior di latte ("Flower of The Milk") Mozzarella, wonderfully flavorful and also from Italy.

And we could also get by using cheaper Asiago and Fontina cheeses, like those "aged" for just one month. But when you taste what six months aging can do, you'll be glad we chose not to.

MORE FLAVOR = LESS FAT.

Of course, buying these high-end varie means we have to charge a little more, but advantages are huge.

The flavors are more inte so a little goes a long w We don't need to gob it super thick like most pla This means, instead of sc ing down thousands of calo and obscene grams of saturated f our guests enjoy a more delicious pi and less guilt.

CHEESE-LOVERS, COME GET A REAL CHEESE FIX.

To experience how excellent cheese taste, consider our 'Three Cheese' with M zarella, Ricotta and Asiago plus diced tom and minced garlic. Or 'The Swellesley,' starr Parmigiano-Reggiano.

You'll never go back.

Good Is Easy. Great Isn't.

HOME BASE

IT'S BEEN SIX YEARS since Sean McDonough and NESN parted ways. Yet the broadcaster remains a fan favorite, thanks to his rapport with his booth-mates (McDonough coined the term "RemDawg") and to his way with a memorable moment—like Tom Brunansky's pennant-clinching catch in 1990. "I screamed his name and sounded like a schoolgirl," McDonough recalls. "For a long time people would come up to me and scream Brunansky's name." The Quincy resident has kept busy, working for ESPN. This fall, he returns to the majors to captain the Monday Night Baseball booth with Rick Sutcliffe and former Yankee Aaron Boone. Of course, we all know where his allegiances lie. "[Announcers] Bill Raftery and Jay Bilas make jokes because I always reference 'the great state of Massachusetts,'" McDonough says. "I always say, 'Boston is the greatest city in America,' and I really believe that." NICK ALTSCHULLER

Dining Out

The House Bunny

If rabbits indeed bring luck, Will Foden should pick up a lotto ticket. For his cavatelli with rabbit ragout, the Bina Osteria chef and Dante alum brines the meat in a red wine, sugar and salt solution, sears it and then braises it for several hours with more vino and a pear. The shredded, confit-like result clings nicely to the ricotta-based pasta (house-made, of course) and soaks up the savory effects of both truffle cheese and truffle oil.

RAW DEAL

Boston's no slouch when it comes to sushi, but until Yoshiyuki Kawamura opened Sakanaya in January, DIYers were hard-pressed to find the primo seafood they needed for home dining. Kawamura, a longtime cutter at Tokyo's famous Tsukiji Market and former fish buyer in Boston, keeps his Allston emporium impressively stocked with schools of hyper-fresh fish, including varieties of toro, salmon, hamachi, octopus, tobiko, salmon roe and Maine sea urchin. Purchase them in large slabs or pared into bargain snacks like nigiri fingers, makimono or donburi bowls.

Drink of the Moment

Briny Bubbles

Just a year after its inception, ISLAND CREEK OYSTER STOUT already has a lore of its own. "It started in this very room," says Harpoon brewer Bill Leahy, describing the after-work drinking session that spurred the idea. Island Creek's Shore Gregory says the concept grew from a fortuitous downtown encounter with Leahy and an oyster dinner at the brewery.

Whatever its origins, the oyster stout (descendant of the oyster brews of 19th-century London) has been embraced by those in the know. Last year's inaugural batch became Harpoon's best-selling 100 Barrel beer in the series' history.

With the taste of a true stout, Island Creek's brew is dark, rich and malty. Roasted malts and flaked barley combine for a full-bodied beer that tastes like coffee and pours nearly as opaque. After initial notes of chocolate, there's clean minerality and a smooth finish.

About 200 oysters were added at the end of the boil. Though they remain covert throughout most of a sip, the finish at last betrays the bivalves with hints of brine. The saltiness plays off the malt to create an unexpected, vibrant twist. "Drinking the beer alongside oysters adds an entirely new dimension to its flavor," Leahy says. Lucky for us, Island Creek made its stout available in stores and restaurants around the city. Aw, shucks...

OM FREE

Yeo mixes it up with Moksa.

TO HEAR CHEF Patricia Yeo tell it, she's finally on the road to fulfilling her destiny. After closing Ginger Park in the South End, Yeo plans to open another restaurant called Moksa ("destiny" in Sanskrit) in Cambridge. She'll have the backing of the owners of Harvard Square's Om, where she now runs the kitchen and plans to change the menu every two to three weeks.

"I can't stand doing the same thing over and over again," she says. "I get bored." Yeo will have even more to do once Moksa opens in the fall, as she'll remain executive chef at Om, which she notes is "within walking distance" of Moksa's forthcoming Central Square location.

Yeo is still working on the menu. "We haven't quite decided about the food," she says, "although it'll be very much my style: a little bit of everything Asian, whimsical." One thing's for sure: Moksa will be much more casual than Om. Despite her fondness for variety, Yeo is a fan of continuity: She's brought many of her Ginger Park kitchen staff to Om, and plans to take some along to Moksa. "It's nice to have the familiar culture," she says.

Also nice is the retooled menu at Om, which includes dishes such as smoked duck pho, Uygur-style stir-fried lamb with rice gnocchi, and house-made udon with shellfish and spicy kimchi.

STATUS UPDATES: A newly spiffed-up Locke-Ober has reopened. In Cambridge, owner Jeff Stanett says he still doesn't know exactly when First Printer will make its debut, but adds that he's assembled a "world-class culinary team" that'll be "focused on Harvard Square" and serve up "traditional New England food at very high value." "We'll liven the street up," he promises.

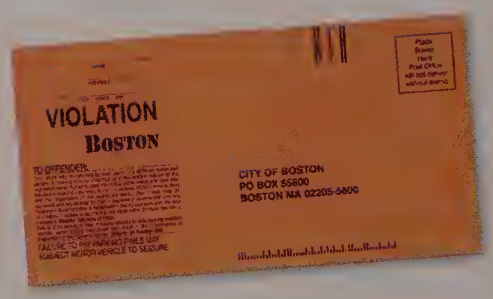
What's Your Best April Fools' Prank?



Mick Greenwood
COMEDIAN
I was waiting tables, and I called the restaurant I was working at and told them I was John Kerry's campaign manager, and that he was set to announce that he would again seek the presidency in 2008 and wanted his reception at the restaurant. I got them to cancel all other reservations to make space. Now I'm not saying I didn't deserve to get fired for that (and you better believe I did), but how stupid do you have to be to think that a presidential candidate would hold his reception at the freakin' Macaroni Grill?

Paul Nardizzi
BEANTOWN COMEDY VAULT
I filled a couple of buddies' vodka bottle with water and some other strong stuff, but removed the vodka, and watched them stumble around Hyannis acting drunk when they were as sober as a judge.

Dan Crohn
IMPROV BOSTON/ BEANTOWN COMEDY VAULT
I put a rubber band around the thermostat (my dad is very Jewish and was a stickler for conserving heat) so that anytime he turned it down, the knob would turn back up again. I ended up breaking the thermostat but forgot about it until winter came around months later and we had no heat.

Dick Doherty
BEANTOWN COMEDY VAULT
My wife and staff told the audience before a show not to laugh at anything I said, so when I went onstage to host and introduce the comedians, I started telling jokes, and I got NOTHING.

Steve Macone
COMEDIAN
While paying some parking tickets, I managed to grab a few bright-orange parking-ticket envelopes. Needless to say, in the following months my roommates got many tickets. They'd see the orange from 100 feet away and flip out, marching over, yelling to nobody and opening the ticket only to see: "Violation: Nobody likes you. And you're a little too close to that hydrant, but mostly nobody likes you."

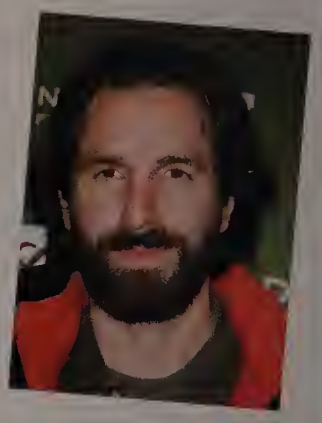
Food for Thought

Sam Carlyle and Bill McCarthy are veterans on the Boston pub scene; Crossroads in the Back Bay has been a longtime vat of intoxication for college students and professionals alike. Their other spots, 6B Lounge and Emmet's, upped the ante with classic cocktails and better-than-average bar food. But at Scholars American Bistro and Cocktail Lounge, they're starting fresh. "We wanted to do something bigger," general manager Kati Semanski says. "When this space became available we saw a lot of creative potential."

Scholars American Bistro and Cocktail Lounge
25 School St., Boston
(617-248-0025)
scholarsboston.com

Inspired by the School Street address and proximity to the original location of the Boston Latin School, Scholars suggests that the classics don't need to be boring. Executive chef Mark Deane Jr.'s menu borrows from his childhood in Vermont, with items like rabbit fritters ($12) and lavender-roasted chicken ($18).

The bar program, heavily focused on craft beers and house-made infusions (like the Cajun vegetable-infused vodka for Bloody Marys), offers cocktails by the glass or pitcher. In a nod to the beer-guzzling at their other outposts, Semanski's Weissen-gria ($10) blends Allagash White with spiced rum, peach liqueur, triple sec and citrus for a refreshing sipper that's ready for summer.



The expansive two-story space uses light from backlit alabaster and a glowing bar to brighten up the shadowy atmosphere. Guests can cue up in the upstairs billiards lounge, smartly sectioned off so as not to detract from the casually refined ambience. But pub regulars can rest assured: Scholars' late-night menu and live music will carry party-seekers long past the dinner hour.

KYLE WRIGHT

Q &A

FIDELITY INVESTMENT

Newton native Dana Adam Shapiro is an Academy Award–nominated director and screenwriter. His debut feature, Murderball, won the 2005 Sundance audience award for best documentary. Shapiro's first narrative film, Monogamy, starring Rashida Jones and Chris Messina, was released this March.

You've previously been considered a documentary filmmaker. Describe your transition to scripted work.
It's more similar than you think. There may not be a script for a documentary, but it's very premeditated. At the end of the day, you have to create an environment no matter what.

In a lot of ways, Monogamy is voyeuristic and feels like a documentary. Was that a conscious decision?
Very much so. I wanted it to feel like you were watching a real couple at a crossroads. It makes you know them intimately. Rashida and Chris knew each other before we began filming, and that definitely contributed to the dynamic. It provided a great lived-in quality.

What made you want to make such a dark film about marriage?
I've been working on a book about divorce for the past few years. Part of the research has been interviewing people about what ultimately tore them apart, and the question of how to sustain long-term sex kept arising. The story-blocks started to fall into place. I was also very intrigued by the idea of photo-stalking and voyeurism and how that plays into relationships... which is probably attributed to the Facebook illusion of reality.

Is that an outwardly negative view of marriage then?
It was my goal to make a very realistic relationship drama. I wanted the audience to leave feeling hopeful and maybe inspired to tackle the problems in their own relationships, to avoid ending up like Theo and Nat in the film.

CATTLE CALL

The hamburger enters its prime.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

IN THE 1940s, a casual California eatery with a yellow-and-red color scheme began serving cheap burgers to an eager public. With booming success came expansion and a wave of copycats looking to cash in on the model.

Of course I speak of In-N-Out Burger, the chain that's captured the hearts and stomachs of both chefs and the foodies who love them. Trying to find the key to its appeal, I asked my Facebook friends for their opinion—and subsequently received more comments in less time than anything I've ever posted, including links to my own work. (I in no way found that insulting.) As a coworker later put it, "Imagine if you went to a McDonald's and it was really clean, and people knew their shit." Loyalists cite the secret menu, which offers the allure of the esoteric, or the dedication to freshness. In fact, In-N-Out policy requires all new restaurants to be within 500 miles of a distribution center, which is why our area currently lacks an outpost.

But we do have Four Burgers. And Flat Patties. And b.good, and 5 Guys, and Boston Burger Company and other establishments capitalizing on the burger-culture cachet. Each offers a look into why the model is thriving, and why we can expect more iterations.

UBurger is a local chain with three locations in the city. Like In-N-Out, it offers a West Coast–style, flat patty burger made from fresh beef ground daily. And like its forebear, everything on the menu is ordained as free of fillers, additives and preservatives. Owned by Christians, all In-N-Out items arrive with Bible verses, but both companies seem to operate on the principle that eating of the sacred cow is some kind of cleansing act. However, digging into a plain hamburger (lettuce, tomatoes, onions, pickles, house spread) wasn't a revelatory experience. The burger ($4.25) looks pristine, like the photographic lies used in Burger King adverts, but the product doesn't taste much different than a Whopper. The one distinguishing factor, the house spread, was dolloped in a nearly undetectable amount, but I assume it represents one of the atolls on the Thousand Island archipelago.

While UBurger illustrates the profitable benefits of fast and cheap, other chains appeal to gourmand sensibilities. The hamburger has recently become an object of playful worship for chefs and restaurateurs. Icon Thomas Keller celebrated the anniversary of the French Laundry with In-N-Out. Says Beau Sturm, co-owner of Somerville's Trina's Starlite Lounge, "It's the benchmark for what everyone's doing," adding that their house burger is "absolutely ripping off the In-N-Out product."

Predictably, the hamburger craze struck years ago in New York, with restaurateur Danny Meyer creating an empire of Shake Shacks, and chefs like Daniel Boulud preparing burgers with price tags reading like traffic tickets. Last year, Boston heard rumors of a Shake Shack hitting the Common and witnessed the coming out of its own hamburger aristocracy (Back Bay Social Club's $21 burger comes to mind).

Into that fold comes 5 Napkin, expanding from three locations in Manhattan with a new spot on Huntington Ave. "We're not just a burger place," co-owner Andy D'Amico says. "It's a concept and a restaurant." Appropriate, as takeout is geared to the corporate crowd. More stylized than the flip-and-fry flat patties, 5 Napkin's versions are 10-ounce pucks cooked to temperature. What's sacrificed in speed is made up for in juiciness, with giant dripping hamburgers ($8.95) requiring a serpentine mandible technique. Conscientious suits may opt for a sixth napkin to tuck under their collars.

After cheap and hedonistic comes the last piece in the procedural: hip. Tasty Burger, by Fenway, embodies that attribute, right down to the remodeled garage location and retro signage. Here the hamburgers ($4) come hot, salty and charred, as if straight from a backyard Weber. (There's also the In-N-Out–esque option to double the beef.) As you wash it down with a tall boy served by a bartender with funky facial hair, Arthur Fonzarelli gives a thumbs up from his pop-art print on the wall, assuring you this is cool.

When our region finally got a Sonic in 2009, there were three-hour backups on Route 16. The arrival of In-N-Out could create a flame of hysteria unseen since Krispy Kreme landed in Medford. Of course, that donut shop has closed. Flames die out. "For trendy foodstuffs are as roses, whose fair flower, being once display'd, doth fall that very hour," said Shakespeare through a mouthful of jellied eels. For burger fans, it's time to strike while the grill is hot.

LOST & FOUND

TO THE VERY HONEST AND ADMIRABLE RUNNERS IN THE BACK BAY:
I decided to take advantage of the first nice weekend since I moved to Boston by going for a run down Comm. Ave. Two miles in, I realized my keys and Blackberry weren't in my pocket. I retraced my steps and found that a nice jogger had placed my keys on a bench! When I got home, I had a message from Verizon saying another kind soul had turned my phone in to the store. Just when I thought Boston was full of Massholes, two honest Bostonians proved me wrong.
New Bostonian Believer

To the family outside of the Prudential Center:
While you rushed across Belvidere Street, a family-size pack of water fell off your child's stroller. I gave you a smile of sympathy and understanding, as I know how hard it can be to grocery shop with a small child and no car. Perhaps you misunderstood, because you yelled back across the street, accusing me of laughing at you. Thanks for confirming what the rest of the country already thinks about Bostonians. Midwestern Blonde

To the lovely massage therapist I met at Jacob Wirth:
You were taking your mom to a Celtics game. We talked over beers about business and you wrote down your phone number and e-mail address for me on a coaster… which, of course, I lost. I'd still like to do lunch. You were pretty awesome. Can we reconnect? Wirth the Risk

COLLIDING FATES

Loss inspires love in a tale about death and family.

ISABELLE, INNOCENTLY driving in the fog, encounters an oddly placed car with a woman and a little boy standing beside it. The two cars "slam together like a kiss," and the woman is killed. Sam, her son, survives. This tragedy creates a confluence of lives, bringing Isabelle together with Charlie, the widower-father. And, yes, romance ensues. But a more mystical connection develops between Isabelle and sweet, mourning Sam. Their bond involves photography and the mysterious, symbolic searching done with a camera. Sam is clearly looking for his lost mother, almost as if he expects to see her hiding within the frame.

Pictures of You
Caroline Leavitt

Leavitt's new novel is set in Massachusetts.

He also develops a fascination with angels, which he projects onto Isabelle. This is fitting, since his mother was no angel, and had been conspiring to leave her family for a man who didn't even know she had a son.

Isabelle's husband has also left, so her connection to Sam and Charlie (and to a pet tortoise, Nelson, whose own tenderness is defended inside his rocklike shell) fills a void, comforting her for the guilt of the accident. Leavitt explores the sideways connections brought on by loss and the many variations of love it inspires, even among people who could be antagonists. ×××

FROM PAGE 54: "There was a black-and-white photo, as shocking as a slap, of two crumpled cars on a lonely road. There was her car, her little Honda, smashed like a metal toy. Pointed toward it was the other car, ruined beyond recognition. For a second, Isabelle covered her eyes. She forced herself to look again, and there was an inset of a beautiful woman laughing, her light hair artlessly cropped, her eyes big as dinner plates. Isabelle began to shake."

GIMME A BEET A luxurious soup pairs beet with beef, yogurt and a caramel crisp.

IN A UNION SQUARE ALLEY between the Independent and Ronnarong Thai Tapas Bar—a passage that hardly deserves a street name—resides one of the most inventive and theatrical restaurants in greater Boston. Theatrical not in the sense of showboating chefs and fiery, open kitchens, but in that of a thoroughly controlled experience, which asks diners to walk the line between active engagement and surrender.

The show starts with the menu. Your choices are limited to either three ($39), five ($65) or seven courses ($85). The three- and five-course meals have vegetarian options, and all of them can be supplemented with beverage pairings ($25–$65). Changing weekly, the menu is stingily worded, a deliberate contrast to both the bewildering number of ingredients in every dish and the staff's eagerness to talk about them. What's listed as "salad" arrived as carrot paper, onion "soil," cubes of watermelon radish and golden beet, arugula pudding and spinach poached in tea butter, among so many other colorful elements that the waitress had trouble naming them all—a recurring problem. Arranged piecemeal with giant tweezers by co-owner Diana Kudajarova, half of the husband-wife cooking team, the salad's preciousness was offset by its beauty and taste.

Journeyman works hard to make what could be a potentially alienating experience into an approachable one. The 36-seat modern loft, painted light blue, contains a floor-to-ceiling wall of herbs in wooden wine cases. A shelf opposite the open kitchen is stacked neatly with dozens of cookbooks; another, with colorful teapots and a red baseball cap. There's no music, and the chefs whisper to each other in a serious tone, but the sounds of friendly chatter bounce off the walls and the servers go out of their way to be helpful.

The restaurant certainly knows how to respond to criticism. So many early reviews complained of small portions that I made sure to eat before my first of two visits. It was an unnecessary precaution. If you're ordering three courses, though, I suggest supplementing with one of the specials—in particular, the charcuterie ($15), which included the creamiest foie gras imaginable, cured duck, headcheese, lardo, pickles, two kinds of mustard and an amazing, spicy yuzu-chili sauce. We were even asked our thoughts on the portion size of the pork belly dish—a new addition that week (it was a generous amount).

One of the best items I had was the beet soup topped with beef marmalade, yogurt mousse, sprouts and a caraway caramel crisp. I wished I could've asked for second helpings of two other dishes: Spanish mackerel and razor clams. The mackerel filet came sandwiched between blinis with a smear of Chinese hunter sausage and bergamot marmalade on one side of the plate and pistachio pesto on the other. The puree didn't add much, but the oily fish, complemented by the spicy marmalade, was both hearty and refined. Razor clams arrived chopped and mixed with pickled coxcombs over greens in a light, wine-enriched clam broth. The coxcombs' texture was indistinguishable from the clams', yet they imparted a rich flavor to the broth that lent the dish a welcome, unexpected dimension. On both visits, house-made fruit sorbets served as the focal points for desserts. Preserved during the peak of summer, the peach and honey-apple flavors called up memories of warmer months.

With so much experimentation, though, there are bound to be miscues. The biggest was the foie-gras terrine with olive ganache. Even paired with a greengage plum (which the waitress unnecessarily apologized for exporting from Australia)—half brûléed and half sliced—there was nothing chocolatey, fruity or sweet about it. Only an accompanying glass of fortified wine kept the dish from tasting like a salt lick.

The pairings yielded some interesting finds like the Éric Bordelet pear cider from Normandy ($25), but overall they're not worth the supplement prices. Instead, indulge in the cocktails, comparable to those from the best mixology-obsessed bars. Try the Union Square Manhattan ($14), a glass of pure bliss in the form of Berkshire Mountain Distillers' New England corn whiskey, Cocchi Americano, Vergano Americano, Bittermens' Boston Bittahs and orange peel.

On their website, Journeyman's owners play up their amateur culinary backgrounds by emphasizing their academic ones, but make no mistake: They know what they're doing. Open-minded diners are in for a captivating experience. ✖✖✖

WEB OF DECEIT

WebMD is a Weapon of MisDiagnosis.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

WITH THE HEALTH CARE system a source of constant debate, I've decided to do everyone a favor and fix it. After giving the matter several minutes of thought, I've found the solution that'll ease the burden on hospitals and drastically lower medical costs: Ban WebMD. Because if you were to remove everyone who went to the doctor because of something they read on the Internet, emergency rooms would be quieter than the Situation's audience at Donald Trump's roast.

Back in the old days, you'd get a strange ache or spot on your skin, and you'd say, "I should really see a doctor about that." But, by the time you got around to actually making an appointment, the problem would've cleared up on its own. The only people at the doctor's office were sitting in a pool of blood and/or on fire.

Now you get a headache and you go on WebMD to see if it's serious. And, according to my interpretation of WebMD, it's always serious. WebMD tells us that a headache might be caused by stress or eyestrain. Or carbon monoxide poisoning. Or encephalitis. Can we interest you in meningitis, or perhaps an abscess of the brain? It's probably an abscess of the brain. Take two aspirins and don't call me in the morning, because you'll be dead.

I've tried to rein in my WebMD searches ever since an especially silly trip to the emergency room. One night I'm eating a steak and accidently inhale as I'm swallowing. It goes down the wrong pipe, I cough and that's the end of it. Or it would've been, were it not for ol' Doc Internet. My lungs still feel irritated, so I consult the Web to learn about the consequences of trying to eat and breathe at the same time. The answer, of course, is deeply disturbing.

For one thing, did you know that dogs can't choke on their food? That hardly seems fair, given that dogs also have sharp teeth, fur and other advantages in life. But we humans can suck food right into our lungs, where it sits and causes pneumonia. Happens all the time. Granted, usually to senior citizens. But with my luck, I'd be the exception. If I were a patient on an episode of House, they'd say, "We've never seen pneumonia in someone so young. That's why we're going to treat you for amyloidosis and then break into your apartment."

According to my interpretation of WebMD, it's always serious.

I call my friend Dave, a doctor, and ask him whether I have enough time to make out a will and go skydiving naked except for a Richard Nixon mask and a pair of Uggs. He replies, "I think that if you had a piece of steak in your lung, you'd know it." Well, that settles it. I've heard from an actual doctor. I'm being silly—so I go directly to the emergency room. Because I know for a fact that my left lung is now 40 percent rib eye.

After a lengthy wait at the E.R., at 1 am a weary doctor sits down to ask me my problem. I inform him that I have it on good authority that steak particles are giving me pneumonia. He calmly explains, in layman's terms, that I'm a moron. I go home and think about how I'll live differently now that I have a second chance at life. Maybe I'll try to be better about recycling, or stop putting voodoo curses on my enemies. The world is my oyster.

At least until I eat some oysters in New Orleans. Shortly thereafter, I break out in a rash. Since it appeared by my foot, I presume it's from some nefarious bayou vegetation I might've touched. But I can't rule out a food allergy. Or bedbugs. When it comes to skin, WebMD has an especially lengthy and disgusting menu of afflictions. Do you know what a carbuncle is? I do now, and I can tell you that "draining the carbuncle" isn't a euphemism. It goes without saying, but the section on carbuncles includes the phrase "fatal if not treated."

However, given my experience with the meat-in-the-lung fiasco, I decide to handle things the old-fashioned way: by doing nothing. So far, I'm still alive. I haven't generated any paperwork at an insurance company or a hospital. And my leg is looking less repulsive by the day. In fact, I'm looking at it right now and OH GOD, the spiders, the spiders are hatching everywhere!

Whoa. Hold on—that was actually just something in my eye. I get these floaty things sometimes. I should probably get them looked at. But I probably won't. ✖✖✖

LABOR PAINS

Tackling the NFL lockout

LONG AGO, I FIGURED OUT the grim truth behind the world of professional sports. The word "professional" changes everything.

We've heard the line ad nauseam, from players in the NHL to the NBA. Before any of them becomes entangled in a contract dispute, they're quick to point out, "It's a business."

We hear it all the time, but we refuse to really listen. In sports, we like to say it's about what happens inside the lines. But pro sports are first and foremost about money. Owners want to get paid, and players want their cut.

And we just want them to do their job, which is to entertain us. We want to see the games, and we want to see them trying their best—owners, too—to win those games.

NFL owners have finally done what they warned us would happen three years ago. They're jumping at the chance to redo the collective bargaining agreement, hoping to throw away the deal they had previously made with the players' union. In the aftermath, the NFL has locked the players out, the players union (the NFLPA) has decertified, and some players have sued the NFL for breaking antitrust laws.

I'm penning these words at the start of March Madness. My competitive juices are boiling. I love this time of year. There's so much good going on in sports, like the Celtics and Bruins getting ready for their championship runs. (I like the Bruins' chances, in case you were wondering.) The Red Sox are a few weeks from starting their season. And one of my favorite events, the NFL Draft, is so close I can smell it.

But the NFL labor negotiations are raining on my parade. The owners and the NFLPA decided to extend their deadline by 24 hours, and then by six more days. I was stupid and got excited. My buds asked me what I thought, and I said, "They're going to make a deal. They want to play the games, and everyone wants their money."

Well, I got one part right: Everyone wants their money. I was gullible, but at least I wasn't in the minority. Now I'm just pissed off, which puts me in the majority.

I don't know a lot about the negotiations. I understand both sides have their grievances and can make decent arguments while standing in front of microphones and TV cameras. But I keep returning to one figure: nine billion.

Or should I say nine friggin' billion. That's the amount of revenue the NFL creates, every year.

It's easy to be outraged as we deal with a recession and an unemployment rate near 10 percent. Everybody knows somebody who's hurting financially.

Isn't that the real crime? This isn't the time to be worried about who gets the biggest cut. Not when the middle class is struggling to pay its bills.

Sure, NFL owners have assumed a tremendous amount of risk, like any business. And they deserve to turn a tidy profit with the way they run that business. We all agree it's the real deal when it comes to providing worthwhile entertainment. Being an owner in the top sports league in the country comes with privileges, as it should.

But with that said, you have to respect the people who perform the labor. In fact, when you consider the risks most of these guys take, it makes me wonder if they're paid enough.

Owners are quick to point out that players receive 60 percent of the revenue. It sounds like a lot, at first glance. However, this is football, and we're not talking about 12 or 25 players. We're talking about 53 guys, not including practice players and a very expensive coaching staff. In other words, there are a lot of costs that need to be covered.

In a sport where players assume so much risk to their personal well-being, they need to be compensated to the fullest.

The fact that owners want to add two more games to the regular season is ludicrous. I'm hoping players don't budge on that possibility. It's not fair. And personally, fans don't need it. The season is long enough. Playing football is a fun but very risky way of making a living. A career lasts about three years. An owner could control a team for decades.

Who's the villain here? There are certainly no dummies on either side of the argument, but everyone, fans included, remembers how damaging a work stoppage was to hockey in 2004-2005. Baseball was dying a slow death after its last labor dispute in 1994-1995, only to be eventually revived by Cal Ripken Jr.'s longevity streak and the Great Home Run Race. (The repercussions of which have fueled the steroid controversy.)

My guess is this will be figured out the closer we get to game day, probably some time in August. But in the meantime, forgive me if I don't pay attention to this new game of billionaires versus millionaires. I already know who loses. ×××

3 Lockout Leftovers

It's All About 18 I'll admit that the owners aren't entirely to blame for this NFL headache, but for them to pretend they actually care about player safety is a joke. As long as they're pushing for an 18-game season, safety's not their priority, and nothing can make me feel any different. (Although I can definitely be bribed.)

Teeing Off I don't love the new kickoff rules, but I think people are being overly dramatic about the NFL moving the ball up five yards. So I'll cut the league a deal. Put an asterisk next to the final score in Super Bowl XXXI, and we're cool. Take that, Desmond.

The Breakfast Club The only thing funnier than Bill Belichick skipping the NFL coaches' breakfast in New Orleans is how upset people got over his no-show. What did you expect? Can you really picture Bill and Rex getting chummy over a plate of lox? A coaches' breakfast sounds like Belichick's worst nightmare. He wouldn't show up if Jon Bon Jovi was making omelets.

NO SPRING CHICKEN It's O'Neal's time to shine.

5 FOR THE CELTICS STRETCH

This Old Shaq It's funny how a 39-year-old who won't clock more than 20 minutes a night is so vital to the Celtics' success, but when you're talking about Shaquille O'Neal, maybe it makes sense. Either way, it's finally go-time for Shaq—the point in the season he's been talking about since August. All he needs are two months of dedicated, consistent basketball, and he's tied with Kobe and can retire a champ. And then maybe there's another Kazaam in it for him.

The New Guys Troy Murphy's been a bust, which is too bad because it wouldn't have taken much for him to earn cult status. Instead, he's been the white Vin Baker. Thankfully, the C's can get by without him. Murphy won't be a factor in the playoffs, because he won't be on the court. Same goes for Carlos Arroyo, who hasn't been quite as bad but isn't as essential with Delonte West back in action.

Speaking of Which Talk all you want about Jeff Green (who's been great), but West is still the most important guy coming off the Celtics bench. History tells us it's dangerous to count on him staying healthy, but if he does, the C's are on another level. He's the hot sauce on their KFC combo meal.

What's Up, Doc? I understand why it's important, but it's a shame we have to endure another spring of intense Doc Rivers speculation. Is he finished? Does he want to go home? What if there's a lockout? What if Lawrence Frank goes to Tennessee? I wouldn't mind just enjoying the moment and sorting it all out later, but I don't think that'll happen.

Cheers to Rondo The Kendrick Perkins trade hit Rajon Rondo hard, and I think those emotions definitely played a role in his recent slump. It's not that he was slacking; he was just genuinely upset over losing his best friend. But he'll get over it, and once the playoffs start, we'll just forget this ever happened. Forget what happened? Ahh, well played.

1 ONE SHINING MOMENT

The Final Four tips off on April 2, and unfortunately my Cinderella pick (Oakland) never made it out of the first round… or so you'd THINK! No, they never did. But thankfully my national champion is still alive: Let's go, Ohio State. (OK, fine, I picked Pitt.)

2 BRUINS BATTLES

Between the Pipes The Tim Thomas/Tuukka Rask battle isn't much of a competition. This season has belonged to Timmy, and there's no doubt that when the playoffs roll around, he'll get the call. But after that, who knows? Each year, goalies play a role bigger than any other position in deciding the outcome of the playoffs. And if Tuukka gets hot, Claude Julien will have a decision to make.

In the Standings This has been a ridiculous season for the Bruins/Canadiens rivalry. If Sox/Yankees is even half as good this year, I think we'll all be happy. Between the seven-goal game, the goalie fight, the Chara hit and whatever craziness went down on March 24, it's been an absolute mad house. And now they might end up playing in the first round? Jack Edwards needs oxygen.

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/1: Happy Dante Bichette Day! It's the 10-year anniversary of the annual celebration held in Bichette's hometown of West Palm Beach, Fla.

4/7: The Celtics visit Chicago for a game that could determine the top seed in the East, as well as answer the age-old question: Does Nenad Krstic like deep-dish pizza?

4/8: The Yankees are here for the home opener at Fenway, where the mound and dugouts are being Bartolo Colon–proofed as we speak.

Soroff On MARIA MENOUNOS

The TV personality dishes on the Obamas, the red-carpet scene and flashing the camera.

MEDFORD NATIVE MARIA MENOUNOS, 32, attended Emerson College and became an international correspondent for Channel One after her junior year. Currently a special correspondent for Access Hollywood, she started working for NBC Universal as the West Coast contributor for Today, and more recently for NBC Nightly News and Dateline. As a filmmaker, she recently produced and starred in the comedy Serial Buddies, which is making the film festival rounds. As a reporter, she has the distinction of being the only journalist to land an interview with the entire Obama family. Menounos has acted in both feature films and on TV, and was named one of People magazine's "50 Most Beautiful People." She founded the nonprofit Take Action Hollywood! This month, she'll publish her first book, The EveryGirl's Guide to Life. She lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Is Emerson College completely taking over Hollywood?
Maria Menounos: It has and it always will, forever.

Why the book?
Because I get stopped constantly and asked the same questions. How did I lose the weight? How do I stay in shape? What makeup do I use? How do I get everything done and still look red-carpet ready? So I decided that I'd share all that with people.

What's your take on all this Lohan and Sheen craziness? Has it reached the point where you're like, "OK, do I have to talk about these people again?"
The Lindsay stuff has definitely gotten old, and I'm sure that Charlie Sheen will feel like that shortly, as well. I don't know if there's any coming back from this for either of them.

Who did you wear to the Oscars?
Johanna Johnson. She's an Australian designer.

Do you keep celebrities at arm's length to maintain journalistic objectivity, or have you become friends with the people you cover?
I've definitely become friends with a lot of them.

Is there anyone about whom you'd say, "I can't do that story because so-and-so and I are really close"?
I've never been in a situation where my friends have had dramas like that. My friends have kept their noses clean, so to speak, so I'm asking them about Pirates of the Caribbean or the TV show they're doing. There's none of that controversy.

Career accomplishment you're most proud of?
The thing that jumps to mind is the Obama family interview. It was an exclusive, so that was a big score. The other thing is how I've conducted myself. Celebrities don't run from me when they see me. I've never wanted to sell people out, or make a career out of people's problems. I want them to shine when I interview them.

Worst red-carpet moment?
I've definitely had a few. I went to a premiere on a really windy day and flashed the photographers inadvertently. But I guess the absolute worst was the time when I was brand new, and I hired a publicist and paid her a huge retainer. She got me tickets to my first premiere, and I was supposed to walk the red carpet, get photographed, etc. I got dropped off and my publicist ditched me. I didn't know anyone. I was almost bawling.

With the world going to hell in a hand basket, why should I give a damn about the latest celebrity falling off the wagon?
I don't think we should care, to be honest. That's part of our problem, and why we're seeing these monsters. We keep covering it, and covering it to their detriment, but at the same time, it's what people want to see. So I think there's something wrong with us that we want to watch these train wrecks more than we want to pay attention to what's happening in the world. Of course, I'm completely guilty of both being one of those people and feeding the fire.

At what point do you start feeling cheesy about all that?
It's not that I feel cheesy. What we do is entertainment news, so that's what I cover. But for instance, with Lindsay Lohan, what makes me so sick about that situation is that she really enjoys the attention, and we're continuing to give it to her. The girl craves it. We deliver.

Anything that's off-limits in terms of covering a celebrity?
I'm very careful about how I handle things because I like to deal with them the way I'd want them to deal with me.

Any instances when the tables were turned?
Yeah. I had a bikini malfunction in Miami on New Years, and the paparazzi got a picture of me and my va-jay-jay. How many times have I reported on Britney Spears or Paris Hilton flashing their crotches? And for me, it was an accident. I was wearing a bikini that the ocean decided to slip off. It's funny, because most people would be angry, whereas I was just disappointed because I thought that we were cool. I'm good to [the paparazzi], so I got accustomed to them having my back, but I get it. That's their job. And nine times out of 10, we want them taking our pictures, because we want to be placed in magazines. You can't have it both ways.

Are there pieces of gossip you'll take to your grave?
Absolutely. In this job, you come to know lots of stuff that people don't need to know. My father taught me to always behave with class, and you'll never hear those things from me.

When you worked at Dunkin' Donuts, if I'd told you where you'd be now, what would you have said to me?
I would've probably believed you because I always fantasized and dreamed, and I kinda thought I'd get here, or at least close. It was a stretch for a working-class girl from Medford with immigrant parents who didn't even speak the language. You don't think it's going to work out, but you dream, and you work hard, and it can happen.

Message to your hometown?
I love you, Medford!

Last question: Will you make me a star?
Yes! Are you hot? I'll have to ask your boyfriend but sure, I'll do that for you. ✖✖✖

OUT OF THE PARK

Why Adrian Gonzalez is going to be an even bigger hit than you think.

POWER SURGE

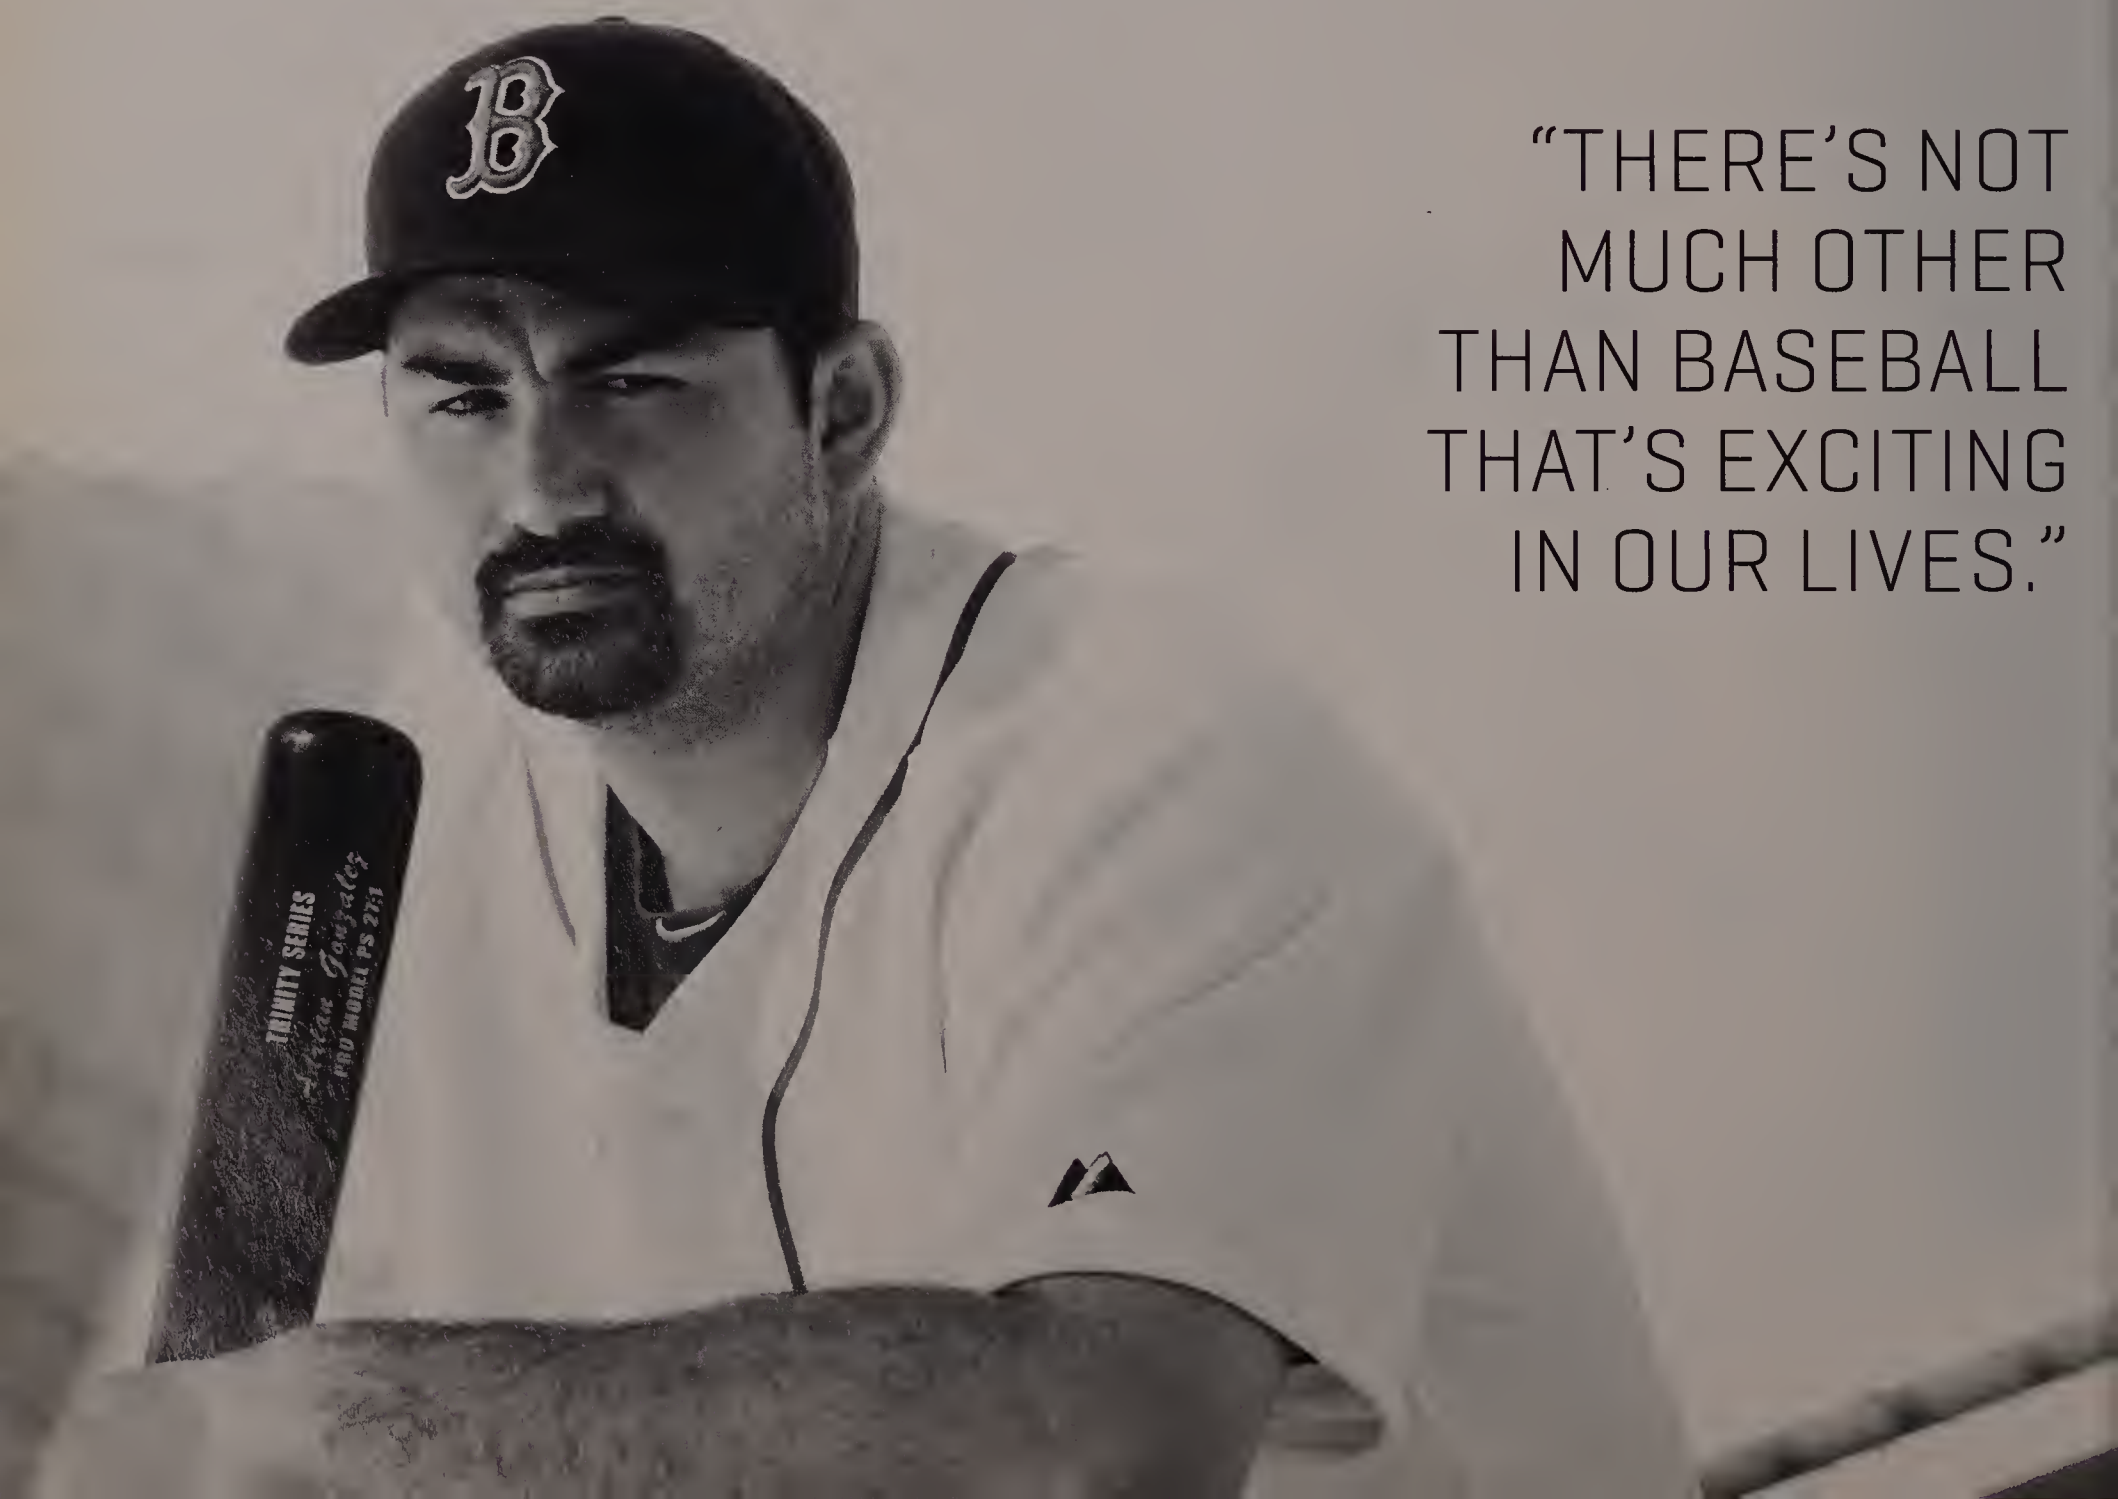
GONZALEZ IS THE BEST PURE HITTER THE RED SOX HAVE BROUGHT TO BOSTON SINCE RAMIREZ.

IN THE INTEREST OF FULL disclosure, you should know up front that Adrian Gonzalez regards Manny Ramirez as a role model, at least in some capacities. Thankfully, this isn't likely to result in a single case of Adrian being Adrian, or of him disappearing into the left field wall as if it were a bathroom stall, or of him skipping out on games to meet friends at the Ritz-Carlton for tea and crumpets.

"No, not at all," Gonzalez says during spring training when asked if baseball fans in Boston should expect him to lead a life chronicled in the tabloids. "They will not see me in any clubs or out after games. That's not something I do, at home or on the road. I don't do much. I basically spend time with my wife. If I had a day all to myself, I'd probably play golf or spend time at home, maybe watching movies. There's not much other than baseball that's exciting in our lives."

But then, in Boston, the baseball is enough.

And it always has been.



The deification of Manny? That's purely for his work in the batter's box, where Gonzalez regards Ramirez, without hesitation, as the best hitter in the game. Expand that question to include retired players and Gonzalez would change his answer—"Barry Bonds," he says—and yet, in the same breath, Gonzalez will go on to say how he studies video of Ramirez, how he tries to pattern himself after Ramirez while at the plate, how "anytime I teach baseball, I try to use him as an example." For the Red Sox, the good news is that Ramirez ceases to serve as a role model for their new slugger the moment he steps away from home plate, be it to take his place in the field as a two-time Gold Glove Award winner at first base, in the clubhouse as a soft-spoken and gentlemanly teammate, or in the community as a devoted husband and citizen.

In fact, what the Red Sox seem to have here, as they embark on a new season and another era in their history, is a man who'll counterbalance the maddening qualities Ramirez once represented, as he stands, calmly and imposingly, in the batter's box at Fenway Park.

With Adrian Gonzalez, the Red Sox organization is moving forward with a different kind of slugger.

THE GREAT MYTH, OF course, is that Fenway Park is perfectly built for right-handed power hitters. It is not. Fenway has always been tailor-made for a skilled left-handed batter possessing at least some degree of power, which is more than just semantics. For baseball novices, the simplest rule to remember is that opposites attract: right-handed batters generally hit to left field; left-handed batters generally hit to right field; most hitters generally excel against pitchers throwing from the opposite side (righties vs. lefties and lefties vs. righties).

And so, when a hitter can excel against what should be a repelling force—namely, left vs. left or right vs. right, both in terms of opposing pitchers and the area of the field they're hitting to—there exists the potential for true potency.

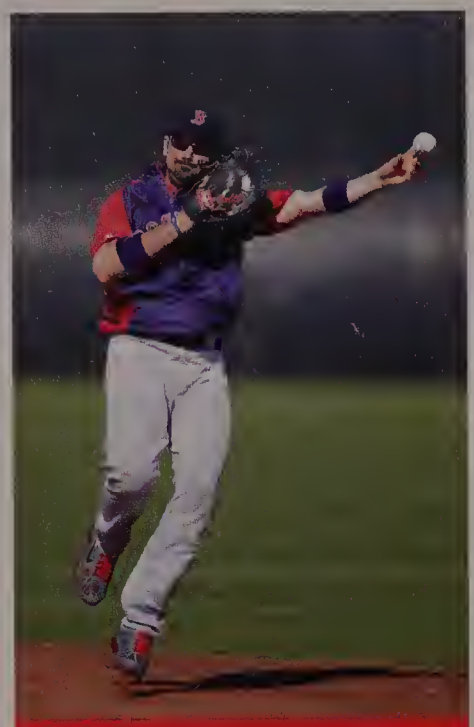
Fact: As Fenway enters into its 100th season, left-handed batters have dominated team history. Assuming a minimum of 1,000 at-bats at Fenway Park—the equivalent of about four or five full seasons with the Red Sox—11 of the top 15 (and five of the top six) home batting averages in team history have been produced by left-handed batters, ranging from Wade Boggs (.369) and Ted Williams (.356) to Carl Yastrzemski (.306) and Troy O'Leary (.304). (Data in this category has only been kept over the last 50 years.) The sole exceptions are Nomar Garciaparra, Dustin Pedroia, Jim Rice and, of course, Ramirez, all elite hitters whose skills further amplify a point that should bring further joy to a Red Sox front office and fan base already bubbling with delight.

If Fenway Park could raise O'Leary's average from .251 (his career number outside of Fenway) to .304, what could it do for someone as gifted as Gonzalez?

"From my perspective, I have a left-center, left-field swing," Gonzalez says. "I'll pull a slow pitch, and I'll pull an inside fastball if I have to, but I'm really not ever looking to pull the ball [to right field]. But to me, leaving Petco [Park, where San Diego plays its home games] for any park that's smaller is a perfect fit."



Indeed, for all of the talk about how Gonzalez is perfectly suited for Fenway, somewhat overlooked is the damage Petco has done to his statistics. In his career at the canyonesque home of the Padres, Gonzalez has a modest batting average of .267; everywhere else, Gonzalez has batted .316. In short, Petco has hurt Gonzalez to even a greater degree than Fenway will help him, suggesting that Gonzalez is a convergence of elements that could make him one of the most devastating and productive hitters in the 100 seasons at Fenway Park.

Consider: During the three-year period from 2008-10, despite the presence of Gonzalez, all left-handed batters at Petco Park hit 13 percent below the league average and amassed 41 percent fewer home runs. By contrast, Fenway increased the batting average of left-handed hitters by five percent and lowered the rate of homers by only 12 percent, meaning that Gonzalez could make sizable gains in both areas.

"We like Fenway for left-handed, opposite-field hitters more than we do for right-handed pull hitters because it rewards good habits for the lefties—letting the ball travel, staying inside the ball, etc.," Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein says. "For righties, Fenway can get you into bad habits—leaking, getting around the ball—that are tough to shake.

"The dimensions obviously favor players who hit the ball to left field a lot, especially hitters who don't have tremendous raw power that way," Epstein continues. "[Switch-hitter] Bill Mueller represented a best-case scenario of sorts in that he was a left-handed, opposite-field hitter and a right-handed pull hitter. Adrian's natural swing path creates a lot of line drives and fly balls in the air that way, so we're optimistic about how he'll like Fenway."

And if Gonzalez likes Fenway, as most everyone expects, it goes without saying that Red Sox fans are positively going to adore him.

Michael Ivins/Boston Red Sox

"WE LIKE FENWAY FOR LEFT-HANDED, OPPOSITE-FIELD HITTERS MORE THAN WE DO FOR RIGHT-HANDED PULL HITTERS," THEO EPSTEIN SAYS. "ADRIAN'S NATURAL SWING PATH CREATES A LOT OF LINE DRIVES AND FLY BALLS IN THE AIR THAT WAY, SO WE'RE OPTIMISTIC ABOUT HOW HE'LL LIKE FENWAY."

HISTORICALLY, THE Red Sox' most elite sluggers and hitters form a complex lot. Williams constantly feuded with the media and was legendarily stubborn. Yastrzemski was crusty, Rice standoffish. Boggs was eccentric, Garciaparra often paranoid, Vaughn both defiant and sometimes reckless. Each came with his quirks and imperfections, all of which were magnified in a city with a long history of hitters dating back to Babe Ruth and World War I.

All those men were a precursor to the incomparable Ramirez, who was celebrated as the biggest free agent acquisition in Red Sox history when the team signed him to an eight-year, $160 million contract between the 2000 and 2001 seasons. And though the Red Sox subsequently obtained David Ortiz in 2003, as well, that signing proved to be a winning lottery ticket, with Ortiz grossly exceeding expectations that were low or nonexistent at the time of his acquisition.

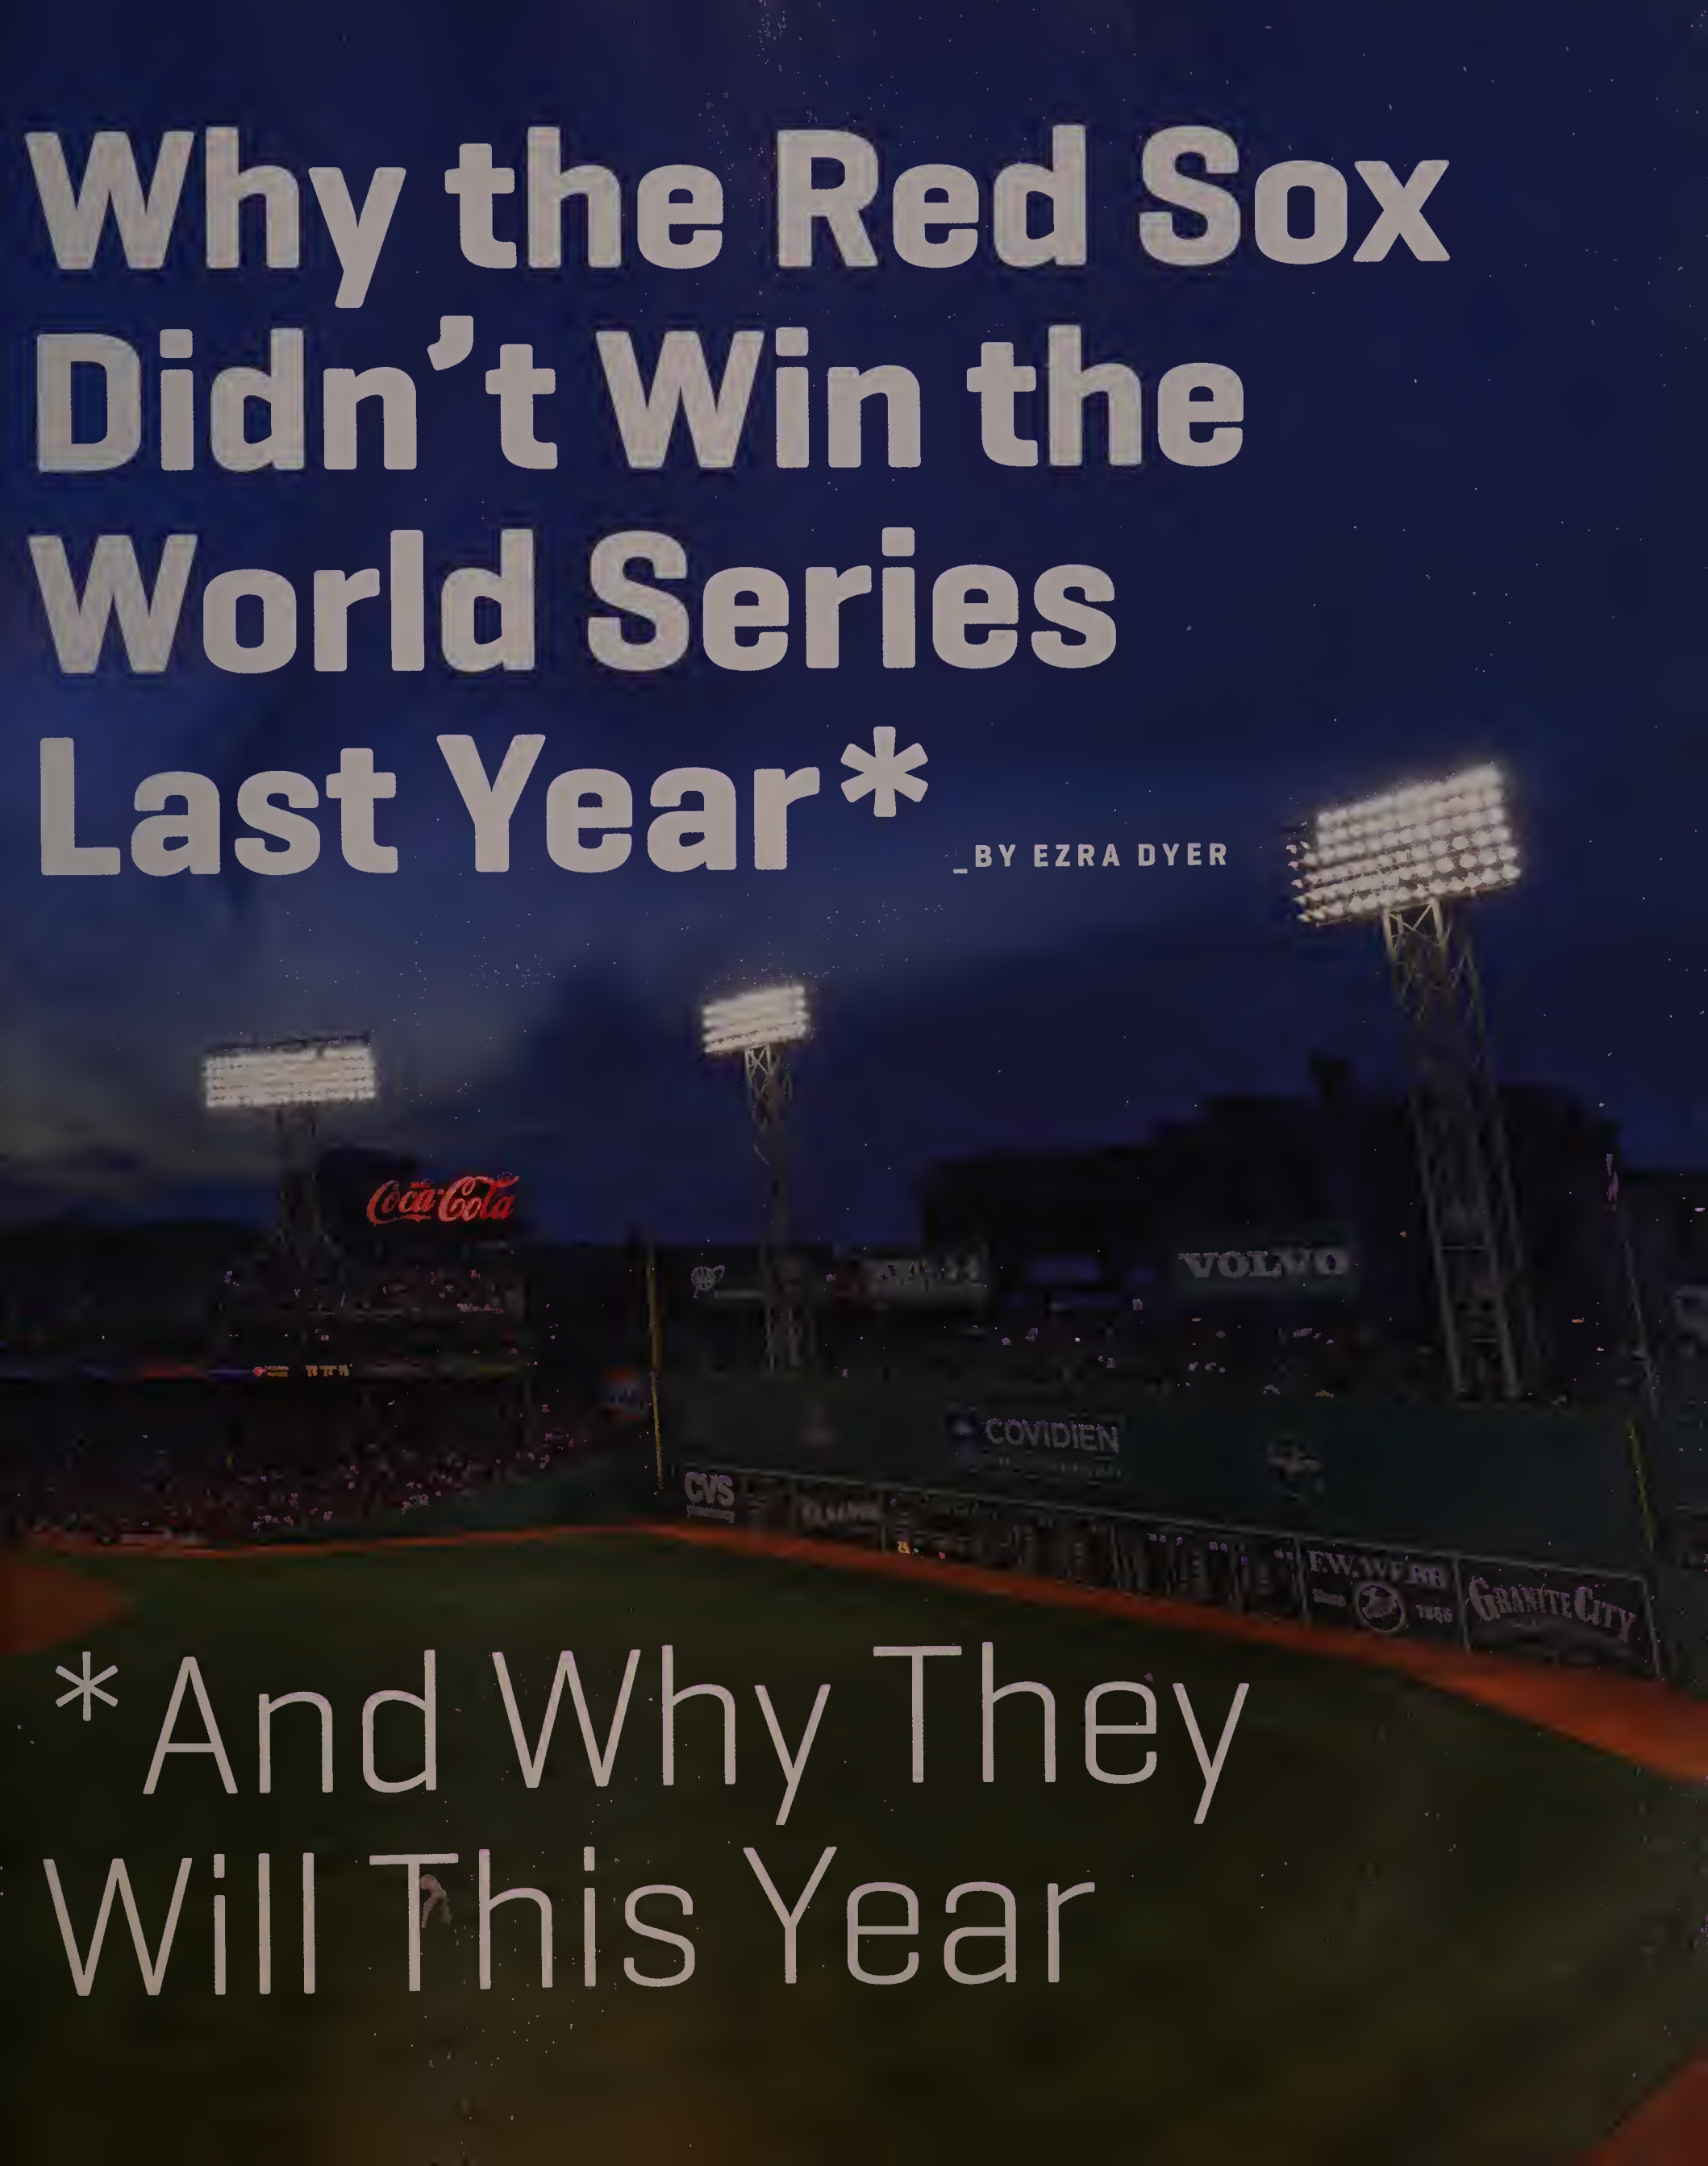
In that way, Gonzalez is the best pure hitter the Red Sox have brought to Boston since Ramirez, putting him in position to face more pressure than any player since Manny himself.

"Everybody tells me you've got to be comfortable with the attention and what comes with it," Gonzalez says. "There's definitely passion everywhere you go, but that's something that's going to be exciting for me to be a part of, especially this year."

Off the field, Gonzalez also promises to come as advertised, though his profile could change if and when success comes his way. (Look at what Boston did for Ortiz.) Former San Diego general manager Kevin Towers, who acquired Gonzalez when working for the Padres organization, describes Gonzalez as "an all-around baseball player" and as someone "a little more on the quiet side," which should hardly bother Red Sox fans, so long as Gonzalez makes the expected noise with his bat. After all, the thunder is why the Red Sox are soon expected to announce signing Gonzalez to a seven-year extension worth an estimated $154 million. When added to Gonzalez' current deal, he'll essentially get the same eight-year, $160 million deal the Sox gave Ramirez in 2000, a contract that remains the largest in club history.

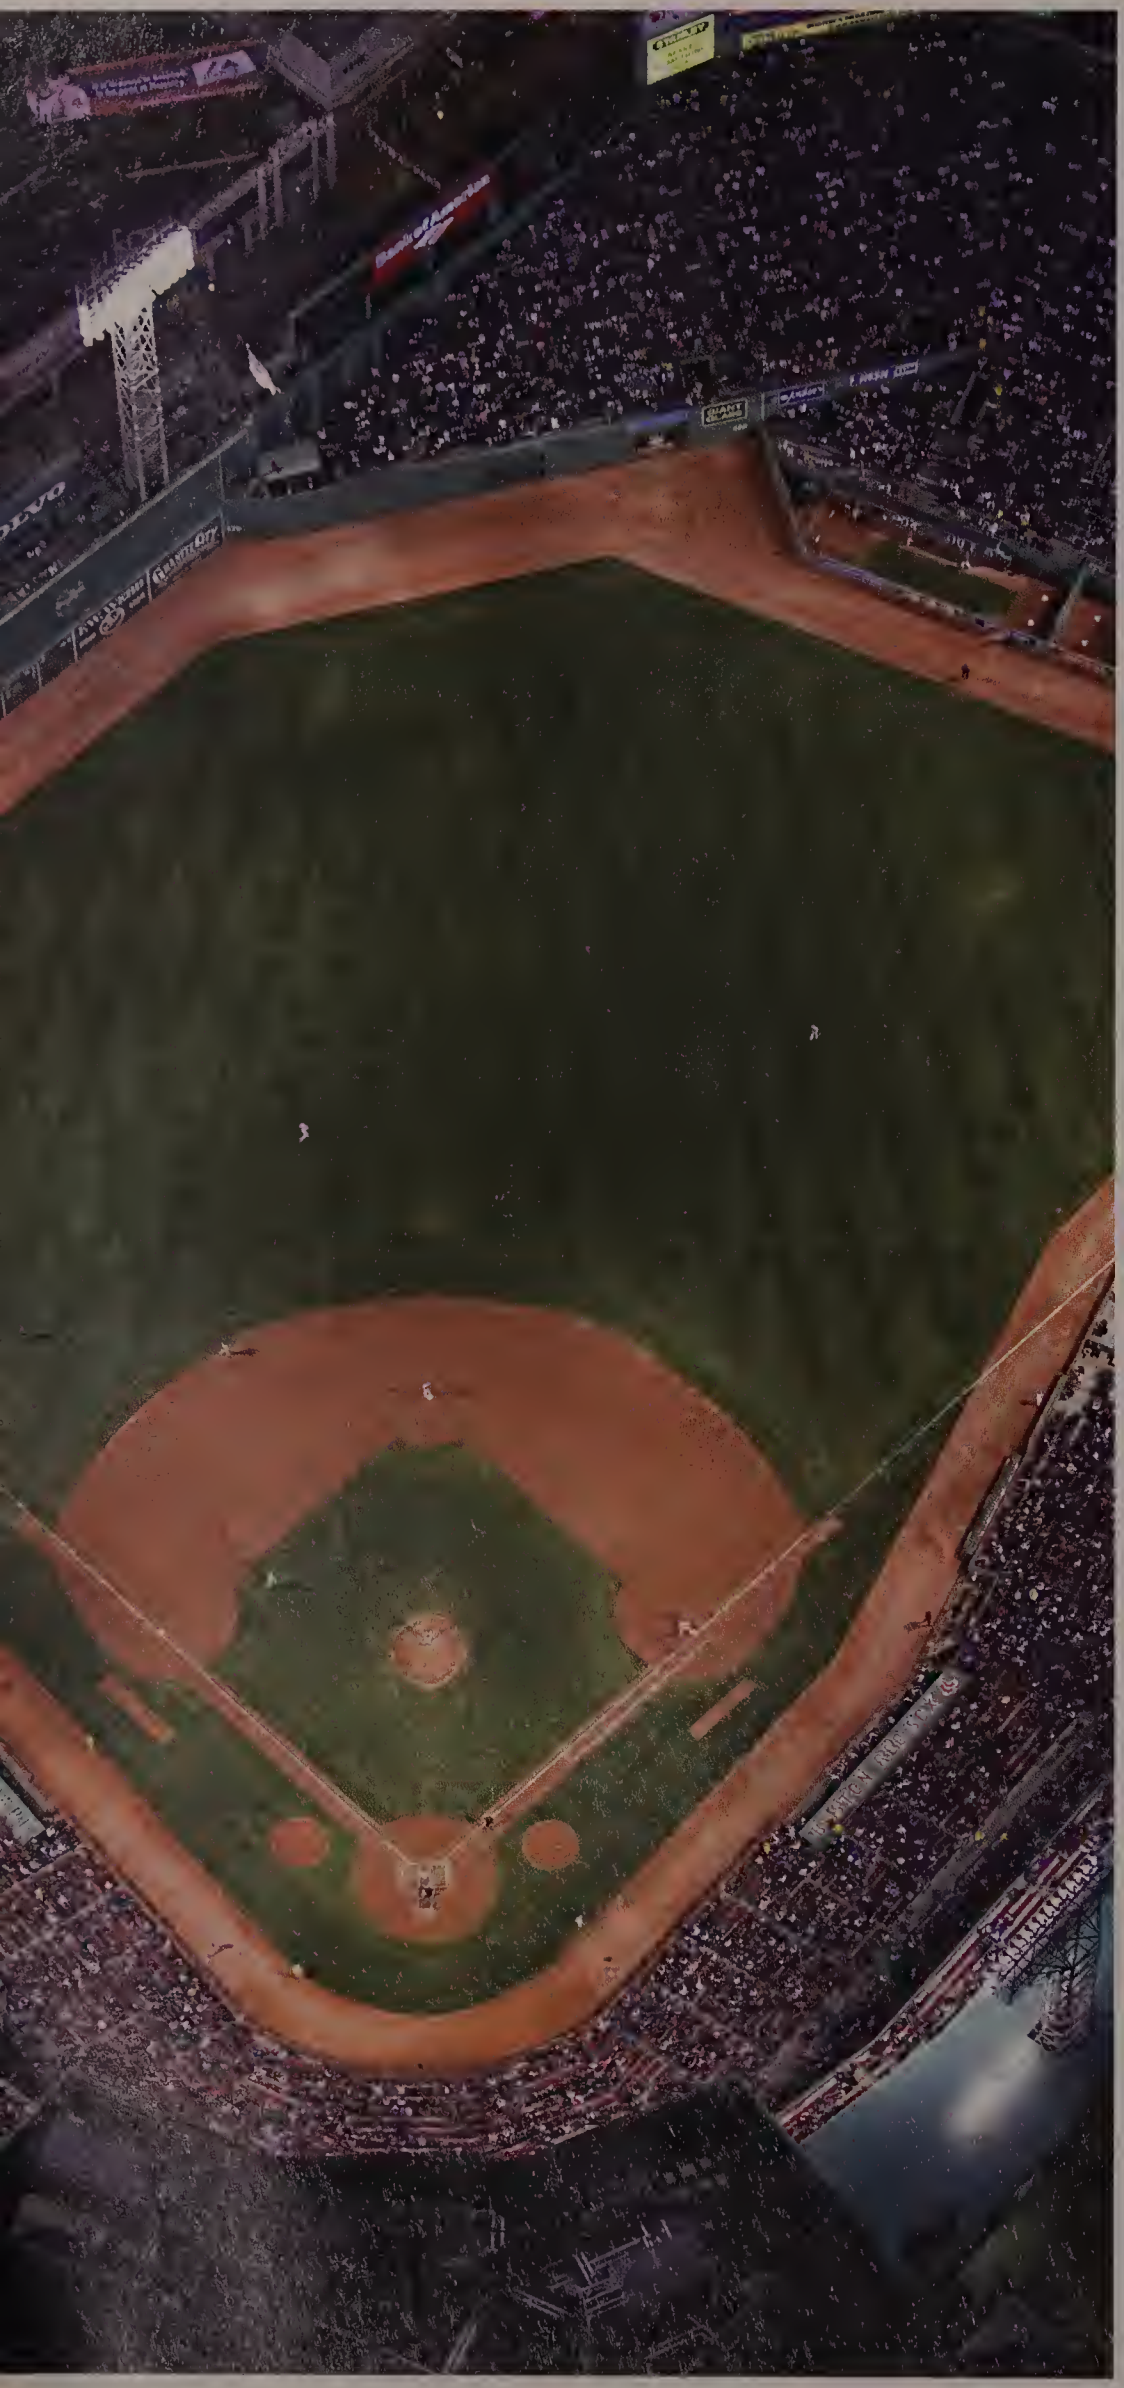
"He comes prepared. Teammates like him. He's not a selfish player by any means, and that's what I liked about him—he wants to win," says Towers, now the general manager of the Arizona Diamondbacks. "Knowing the type of hitter he is, he'll wear out that left field wall. He may not hit quite as many home runs in Fenway, but he'll go up in average."

Towers paused.



"He will pepper that wall," he says.

But after Manny, who needs any more spice? ✖✖✖



Why the Red Sox Didn't Win the World Series Last Year*

_BY EZRA DYER

*And Why They Will This Year

WITH TWO WORLD SERIES TITLES IN the past seven years, Red Sox fans don't have much to complain about. We were once a famously pessimistic crowd, prone to lengthy self-flagellating analysis of whatever disaster derailed the past season. But along with those two titles came a new approach to April: We used to say "this'll be the year" while fighting off flashbacks from the prior October's traumatizing events. Now, Red Sox fans fixate on the future, because 2004 and 2007 proved that sometimes "this year" really does arrive. Instead of bemoaning players lost and opportunities missed, we think about how our rotation will hold up in the postseason and which rookies might crack the roster. With institutional failure banished, we live our lives accordingly. Last season is over. Bring on Carl Crawford and Adrian Gonzalez.

I say, not so fast.

In order to understand the 2011 Red Sox, you need to understand the 2010 Red Sox. Why didn't they win the World Series last year? That's the basic question baseball executives ask themselves over the winter, the thing that Red Sox fans were once so good at dwelling on. [Despite the recent success, mention the year 2003 and many Sox fans will reflexively spit, "Pedro was gassed! Even my dog knew you don't leave him in past 100 pitches in a pressure situation!"]

And there were many, many reasons why the Sox didn't win the 2010 World Series—or, for that matter, make it to the playoffs. But in examining last year's fruitless quest and the ways in which that team's shortcomings were addressed, we can find reasons to get excited for this year. Reasons, in fact, why experts like CBSsports.com's Larry Dobrow has the Red Sox at the top of his 2011 power rankings, calling them not just prohibitive favorites but "exalted rulers of all they survey." Hyperbole, perhaps, but it's refreshing to have people accentuating the positive.

BOMBS AWAY

WITH BETTER PROTECTION IN THE LINEUP, ORTIZ COULD BE BACK TO HIS OLD SELF

APRIL SHOWERS BRING MAY DINGERS

David Ortiz had a rocky start to the past couple of seasons. In 2009, it basically took him until July to find his swing. Last year he got into his groove by May, but April was like a bad freshman semester that haunts your GPA until the day you graduate. When your team makes it to the postseason, April's tribulations are quickly forgotten. But when you miss the playoffs, you're reminded that every game counts, and you wonder what might've been if Papi hadn't spent the first month hitting .143 with one homer.

In 2010, Ortiz hit .270 with 32 home runs, which is all the more impressive given his start. So, is there reason to think that this year he'll leave spring training in Fort Myers and start the season in fearsome form? Well, just based on the improvement of the lineup around him, it's conceivable that Papi will see better pitches from day one. But even if he doesn't—and it takes a month or two for him to start golfing those inside pitches over the fence—that's less of a liability this time around. Because Ortiz's bat won't be the defining factor in Red Sox run production. Last year, Papi's 102 RBIs matched Adrián Beltré's total, and nobody else was really close. This year, his relative importance has diminished, and that's a good thing.

> You wonder what might've been if Papi hadn't spent the first month hitting .143 with one homer.

ADRIAN!

We've traded Adrians. Beltré is out, Gonzalez is in. It's nice that our new first baseman is a three-time All-Star. Even better, those three appearances were consecutive over the past three years. So this move isn't your typical "gunning for a veteran player who might give you one more good year but wants a contract for four" scenario. Gonzalez is 28 years old—he could be here for a while. And based on the lengthy chronology of Theo's pursuit of him, it's easy to imagine that happening.

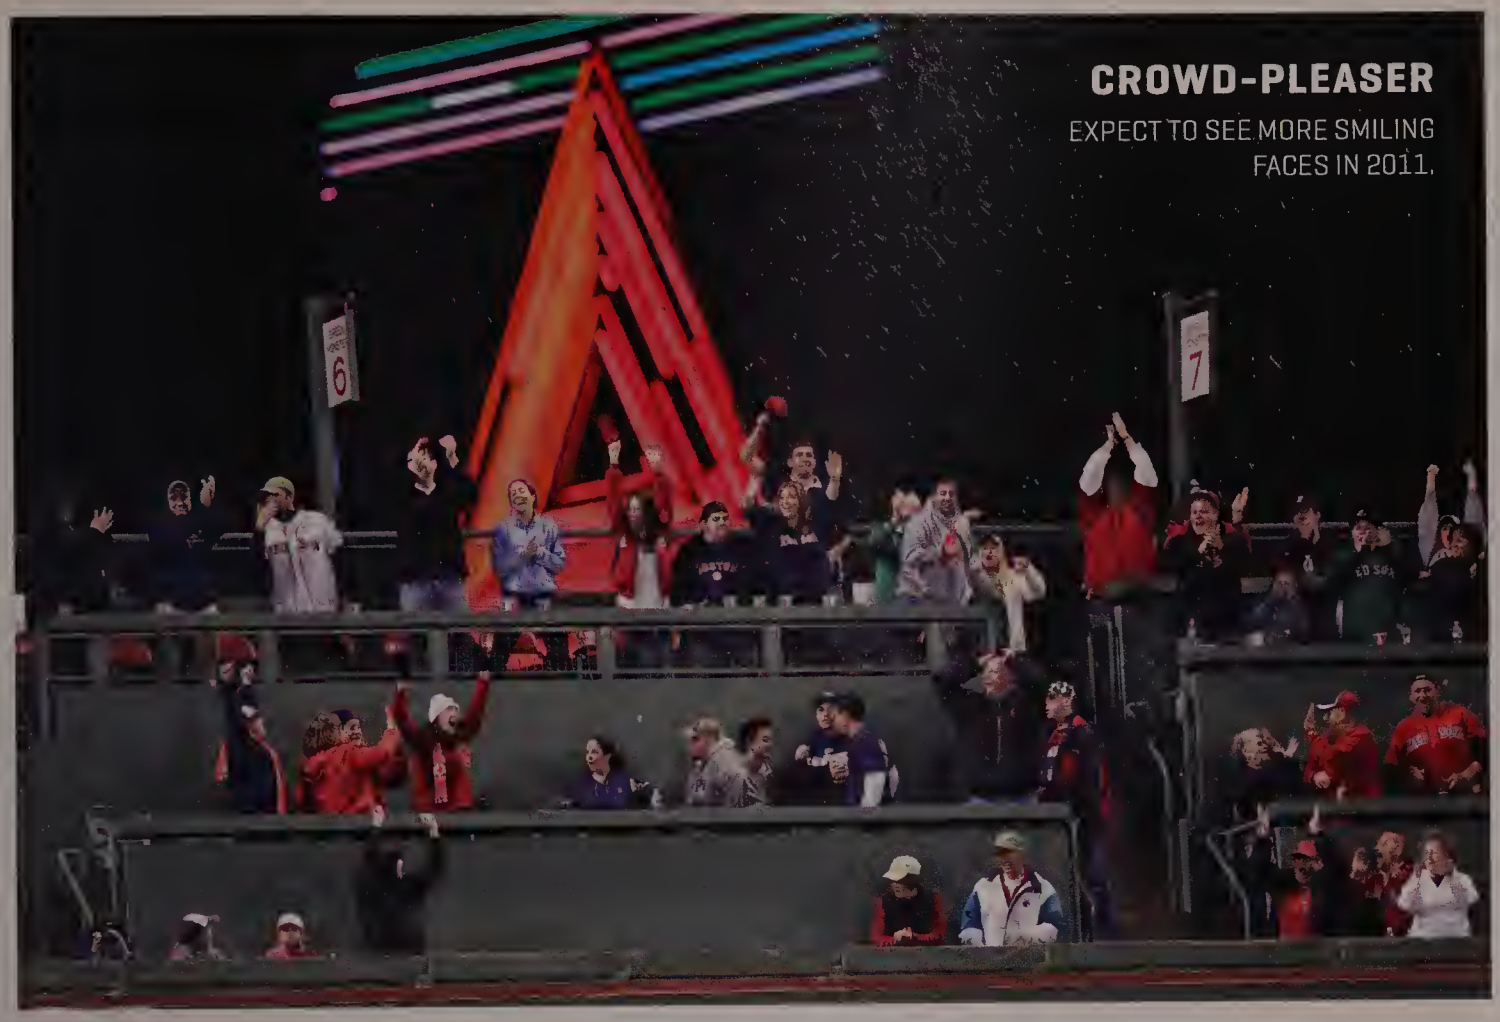
Theo's been watching Gonzalez since he was playing high school ball in Chula Vista, Calif., when Epstein was a fledgling executive with the nearby Padres organization. The Marlins took Gonzalez with the number-one overall pick, later trading him to the Rangers for our old friend Ugueth Urbina (you're never more than a couple degrees from an Ugueth Urbina connection). Now, several 30-plus home run seasons later, Gonzalez is holding down first base, and there's reason to think his numbers could even improve, despite his shoulder injury. For one thing, his numbers were always much better on the road, suggesting that Petco Park wasn't great for his production. And he's now batting in the heart of a lineup that also includes another major free-agent upgrade: Carl Crawford.

RAPID RECOVERY
CRAWFORD HELPS GIVE THE SOX THE SPEED THEY WERE MISSING.

CRAZY CARL, MINUS THE CRAZY

How much does the organization adore Carl Crawford? They showed their love over the winter in 142 million little ways, to be handed out over seven years. Everyone gets obsessed with batting stats, and Crawford's .307/19 HR season last year puts him in good stead. But more than that, Crawford gives the Sox a dimension of speed that they sorely lacked. I haven't checked the official stats, but I'm pretty sure that the last Red Sox player to steal a base is Dave Roberts.

Crawford's also an excellent defensive outfielder, and his proven combination of hitting and fielding prowess will be a refreshing change in the Sox outfield. Damon had range but needed a cutoff man for throws longer than 20 feet, and Manny played left field like someone who'd just been beamed onto the turf Quantum Leap–style and was totally confused about his predicament. Crawford should help score runs on offense while erasing a few with his defense, mightily rejuvenating an outfield that spent 2010 in the hospital. Which brings us to injuries, the defining topic of last year's team.



MY NECK! MY BACK! MY NECK AND MY BACK!

It's certain that at some point in 2011, the Red Sox will suffer injuries that end up costing them wins. But it's just as certain that the prognosis won't reach last year's levels of bad luck, when they were practically starting guys whose previous position was equipment manager.

I'm sorry, did I say "practically"? I meant literally. With Mike Cameron nursing a hernia and Jacoby Ellsbury out with broken ribs, the Sox brought Daniel Nava up from Pawtucket. And it's true that Nava was once cut from the Santa Clara University baseball team, so he became the equipment manager. He got his revenge on that coach by hitting a grand slam on the first pitch of his first major-league at-bat, providing a rare happy story in the 2010 Red Sox season.

Where ribs are concerned, you've got the same options as a horse with a broken leg. So the 2010 season was largely Ellsbury-free, denying the Sox one of their few threats on the base paths and causing female fans to wail and rend their garments.

The 2010 injury situation was pretty grim. Everyone had high hopes for Ellsbury until he collided with Beltré early in the season. Have you ever tried to swing a bat with broken ribs? I have. In high school, I broke a few of them when I crashed my ATV. I tried to avoid telling my parents about this little mishap, but the jig was up when baseball season started and every time I swung the bat it looked like an invisible tiger was mauling me. Modern sports medicine can produce amazing results (see:

CROWD-PLEASER
EXPECT TO SEE MORE SMILING FACES IN 2011.

Getting back Pedroia, Ellsbury and Youk is like signing three blockbuster deals.

FrankenSchilling's cadaver-foot), but where ribs are concerned, you've got the same options as a horse with a broken leg. So the 2010 season was largely Ellsbury-free, denying the Sox one of their few threats on the base paths and causing female fans to wail and rend their garments.

At least we still had Pedroia. Or we did until he fouled a laser off his foot and broke it (right after hitting three homers in a game). Víctor Martínez broke his thumb and missed four weeks. Youkilis was out two months with a muscle tear. And I haven't even mentioned the pitching staff yet.

The good news: While some of those injuries were season-ending, none of them were career-ending. Hell, the Sox even have a guy in their system who nearly went blind last year (Ryan Westmoreland, who had a "cavernous malformation" removed from his brain), and he's fighting his way back into playing shape. Just getting back Pedroia, Ellsbury and Youk is like signing three blockbuster deals and remaking the whole top of the lineup.

PENT-UP AGGRESSION

The bullpen was the big problem for last year's Sox, and not just the actual structure, which the owners considered widening because it's apparently a claustrophobic hellhole. The team won 89 games—pretty respectable, all things considered—but Daniel Bard and Jonathan Papelbon combined for 15 blown saves. The Sox finished six games behind the Yankees. The "blown save" is kind of a brutal stat because it hangs a nine-inning team effort on one person (and often one pitch), but the fact remains that the 2010 Sox coughed up some leads.

Measures have been taken, in the form of new setup men Dan Wheeler and Bobby Jenks. Jenks has a career E.R.A. of 3.40 and would probably be the closer on most other teams. Wheeler? He's one of those Mike Timlin–esque guys who doesn't have gaudy stats but whom batters seem to fear. Many of the hitters on the Sox roster have played against Wheeler, and most have fared quite poorly—in the 2008 ALCS versus the Devil Rays, Pedroia was 0-for-10 against him.

As for Papelbon, fear not. Closer is a position where success is expected and failure is magnified, making any struggles both pronounced and, maybe, exaggerated. As with Papi, the improvement of the team as a whole should reduce the pressure on Papelbon and let him focus on doing his thing: namely, staring down opposing batters like a murderous sociopath.

SOME YOUNG GUY

New pitching coach Curt Young hails from the A's, where he once worked with a bench coach named Terry Francona. You may wonder how much impact a coach has on the grown-ass men on the field, but the evidence suggests that Young should be a boon to the Sox pitching staff—during his tenure with the A's, six pitchers made the All-Star team.

Young's already started addressing problems from last year. For instance, Dice-K tends to throw eight million pitches per year, thanks to his unique style of loading the bases before deciding to get anyone out. On top of that, he's traditionally thrown a side session and a long-toss session two days after his start. Young's convinced Dice-K to break his between-start throwing sessions into two days, rather than doing it all at once. Will the new workout regimen help Matsuzaka bear down or diminish the fatigue that strikes him during games? That remains to be seen, but it's refreshing that an outsider is coming in and tackling a situation that came to be taken for granted. Sometimes with pitchers a change of pace is all they need, and Young has the fresh perspective to mix up the routines.

ABOUT THOSE OTHER THINGS

So, the Sox have a better bullpen. They have more power in the lineup. They're healthier. They have better outfield defense. Things are looking good. The only major net loss in production is behind the plate, where Jarrod Saltalamacchia is unlikely to replace Víctor Martínez' .300/20 HR track record. On the upside, we'll get to hear drunken townies cheering for a guy named "Salty" throughout the summer. And, with a little luck, through October, too. ✖✖✖

RUSSIA'S OLDEST symphony orchestra isn't running any risk of homesickness when it arrives at Symphony Hall on April 10. In a program focusing on native composers, the St. Petersburg Philharmonic Orchestra will perform Rimsky-Korsakóv's Russian Easter Overture, then reprise Shostakovich's Cello Concerto No. 1 in E-Flat Major—a composition the group premiered in 1959. To add a little geographic variety, the program culminates with Brahms' Symphony No. 4, a piece famed for its liberal use of the triangle. Principal conductor Yuri Temirkanov, who's known for his depth of feeling instead of his clinicism, is joined by guest soloist Alisa Weilerstein, who's known for her cello.

Banned Aid

Improvable Cause Moral crusaders beware: Internal censors will be switched off when Urban Improv's annual "Banned in Boston" benefit lands at the House of Blues on April 1. Local celebs and media personalities, including Aerosmith bassist Tom Hamilton and attorney general Martha Coakley, will perform an improv revue while partygoers enjoy food from the likes of Chez Henri and Tremont 647. The event benefits Urban Improv's creative initiatives for youth who face violence, racism and financial hardship. Sounds like a great f@#$ing cause.

Class Struggles

After-School Special The first scenes of Willy Russell's Educating Rita may seem familiar to anyone who's seen Legally Blonde, but there's more to the story than a seemingly vapid student. The comedy follows a working-class hairdresser seeking a new life through higher education, but behind the jokes lies commentary on society, culture and personal insecurity. The Huntington's revival runs through April 10 at the Boston University Theatre. Caroline Jones

The Adjustment Bureau ★★ Based on a short story by Philip K. Dick, whose brain-twisting existential malaise has already influenced films like Blade Runner and Minority Report, The Adjustment Bureau stars Matt Damon as David Norris, a cocky young politician. In the men's room rehearsing his concession speech, he meets a blowsy party-crasher played by Emily Blunt, kicking off a delightful back-and-forth of screwball banter. These crazy kids belong together, but the science-fiction plot says otherwise. Enter the Adjustment Bureau, a collection of awesome character actors in fedoras bumping into people and causing so-called coincidences. Answering to somebody who's supposed to maybe be God, they work like trenchcoat-clad angels, taking orders from memos delivered in faded manila envelopes. Their superpowers are arbitrary and depend on the whims of the plot, which is all just an excuse for more classically Dick-ish debates on predetermination versus free will. Apparently magic fedoras allow access through secret doorways that teleport you across entire city blocks. But you know who's really good in this movie? Matt Damon. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Biutiful ★ ½ The Bataan Death March of art-directed sorrow, director Alejandro González Iñárritu's fourth feature wallows in hopelessness, rubbing your nose in filth, sadness and despair so suffocating it becomes comical. Javier Bardem stars as Uxbal, a two-bit hustler just barely scraping by on the ugly side of Barcelona and attempting to rescue his kids from their abusive, bipolar mother. She's a part-time hooker who's also sleeping with Uxbal's sleazy, obese brother when she's not busy slapping around the children. Uxbal also happens to be dying of prostate cancer... and can talk to dead people. But that doesn't figure into the story as much as you might expect. Or really, at all. For all his formal brio, Iñárritu is at a complete artistic dead end, fixated on the inherent nobility of suffering without a larger point to make. Biutiful lumbers toward a preordained, pitiless conclusion without a single organizing idea or overarching theme besides the uninspired notion that life can really suck sometimes, and eventually you die. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Black Swan ★★★★ Flirting with ridiculousness on its way to the sublime, Black Swan is either the greatest stupid movie I've seen all year, or the stupidest great movie. Such petty distinctions hardly matter when you're caught up in its headlong rush. Natalie Portman stars as a stunted porcelain ballerina living in a cramped apartment with her stage mommy (Barbara Hershey), until she gets the role of a lifetime playing both the virginal white swan and her slatternly black counterpart in her company's latest production. Down the rabbit hole we go, getting a first-person view of her escalating mania, thanks to director Darren Aronofsky's dizzying technique. Keeping the camera claustrophobically close to his heroine, he cuts and jumps while cranking up the Grand-Guignol music cues. Walls of mirrors hammer home the doppelgänger themes. Shot on 16mm by the brilliant Matthew Libatique, the film's palette retreats into high-contrast blacks, whites and blood-reds as we descend into chaos. (At West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Cedar Rapids ★★ ½ A stunted man-child's journey (The Office's Ed Helms) from a small town to a medium-sized city for an insurance convention begins by mining lame hick humor, like Helms' gobsmacked awe at economy-motel accommodations. But director Miguel Arteta's latest feature gets better as it goes along, thanks mostly to the contributions of a stellar supporting cast. Helms' good-natured rube slowly brings out the best in his sad-sack colleagues, who swarm to the annual industry gathering as an excuse to drink heavily in soul-deadening chain restaurants and party hard as a vacation from their miserable lives and collapsed dreams. An unrecognizable Anne Heche costars as a disarmingly matter-of-fact adulteress, but the movie belongs to John C. Reilly as a bloated backslapper who laughs way too loud at his own vulgar jokes. Reilly is an Arthur Miller character for the Apatow era. Too bad Cedar Rapids slinks away from his despair in favor of a formulaic happy ending. His performance deserved a braver movie. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Cold Weather ★★★ ½ Often unfairly lumped in with the played-out mumblecore movement that was all the rage in film festival circles a few years back, writer/director Aaron Katz has a poet's eye for the mundane. Not yet 30, this gifted filmmaker displays a knack for striking compositions, capturing ineffable throwaway moments among characters struggling to make sense of Jake Gyllenhaal makes the moment last, again and again.

Source Code ★★★
Starring Jake Gyllenhaal, Michelle Monaghan, Vera Farmiga and Geoffrey Wright. Written by Ben Ripley. Directed by Duncan Jones. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

BACK WHEN HE WAS STILL a film critic and hadn't yet become a stark raving lunatic, iconic director Jean Luc-Godard once said that the best criticism of a movie was to make another movie. By that rationale, I'd argue that Source Code is a rebuttal to The Adjustment Bureau. Director Duncan Jones' sophomore effort is a sleek machine, which touches on romanticized questions of true love, alternate realities and predestination, but nails them to the floor with a rock-hard discipline that this particular critic applauds.

Source Code begins with Gyllenhaal as a shell-shocked veteran of the Afghanistan War waking up after a snooze on a Washington, D.C., commuter train. He has no memory of where he was or his mission.

Suddenly, a hot fellow passenger (Michelle Monaghan) is being entirely overfriendly. Weirdly enough, there's also another strange commuter staring back at him in the mirror whenever Gyllenhaal goes to the bathroom.

Then the whole goddamn train explodes.

Gyllenhaal is quickly plunged back to a frosty control bunker, video-linked to an even chillier commanding officer (Vera Farmiga) and her no-nonsense superior (Geoffrey Wright, who decided to let his ostentatious crutches deliver half the performance for him).

After some hasty explanation, we're led to believe that thanks to the brain's capacity to retain information shortly after death—plus a quantum physics equation to be named later—a secret military forensic operation has allowed Gyllenhaal's grunt to mind-meld with a civilian victim and witness a terrorist attack that already took place several hours before.

The rules are hard and simple: He can only witness the last eight minutes on the train, and he can't alter the outcome. Everything else is gobbledygook that director Jones ushers off the screen as quickly as possible, as opposed to The Adjustment Bureau, which re-explained each arbitrary rule so often that it no longer even made sense to anybody, including the actors.

It's nice to see Gyllenhaal finally settling into a part he can handle.

The bomber has a great big nuclear surprise planned for later in the day, so it's up to discombobulated, time-travel-sick Gyllenhaal to navigate his way through this particular caboose, over and over again, until he finally locates the terrorist.

The lovely Michelle Monaghan, who, for the first time since her breakthrough role in Kiss Kiss Bang Bang, is allowed to exude her full charisma, provides some romantic distraction from the task at hand. I'd rather flirt with her than hunt down a mad bomber, too.

What follows is Groundhog Day crossed with Speed, a star-crossed love story unfolding in eight-minute couplets. Paced like a rocket and unfolding perilously close to real time, Source Code creates a maze in which we want the hero to solve the mystery and save the girl from a tragedy that has already occurred.

Working from a script by Ben Reilly, Jones plows a lot of the same gimmicks that made his 2009 summer sleeper Moon such a pleasant surprise. Notoriously born as "Zowie Bowie," Jones has since scrambled far away from his father's formidable sphere of influence and carved out a niche within the kind of thoughtful, low-budget space oddities that folks just don't make anymore. Composition and editing provide more thrills than the dodgy CGI.

And it's nice to see Gyllenhaal, who so often struggles with roles above his pay grade, finally settling into a part he can handle. The Speed comparisons don't end here, as Source Code reminds you of when Keanu gave up on all that Shakespearean balderdash and embraced his talents as a handsome guy who can move well on camera.

Source Code plays by its own rules and—for most of its running time—is a masterful example of sci-fi at its best and most dystopian.

So when it feels like the movie should end, just walk out. Source Code has another 10 minutes to go that keep it from being a hallmark of the genre, and it soon falls into the realm of all those other April also-rans. There's a crowd-pleasing whatzit of an addendum that frankly makes no sense and sells out almost everything that has come before, damn near ruining the movie.

A smart projectionist would jump on this with a pair of scissors. ✖✖✖ encroaching adulthood and its inevitable complications. Unlike Katz's previous pictures, the gorgeous Dance Party USA and Quiet City, Cold Weather is a bona fide genre flick. Cris Lankenau stars as a college dropout trying to play Sherlock Holmes alongside his estranged sister (Trieste Kelly Dunn), who functions as a default Watson on the rainy, not-so-mean streets of Portland, Ore. His ex-girlfriend has gone missing, but this delicate movie uses the sturdy standbys of detective fiction as mere pretext for investigating more vexing matters of familial guilt and years wasted on petty rivalries. A breathtaking final shot suggests that our siblings might actually be the film's real mysteries. (At the Brattle Theatre through April 3.)

The Company Men ★★ Acclaimed TV director John Wells' feature debut deals with the plight of downsized business execs, but with around 10 percent of the country out of work, it's tough to feel torn up about Ben Affleck having to sell his Porsche. Despite the contributions of brilliant cinematographer Roger Deakins, The Company Men has a distinctly small-screen sensibility, often feeling like an entire season of one of Wells' polished dramas (ER, The West Wing) whittled down to feature length. It also feels inauthentic, a combination of talking points and statistics missing the grace notes of real-life experience. Adding to the ersatz pallor is Hollywood's recent, unfortunate affinity for terrible

Float On

Mardi Gras Madness Believe it or not, Mobile, Ala., was throwing down the fun and funk 18 years before Mardi Gras hit Bourbon Street. In 2007, it was the same old song and dance, sadly coupled with the lingering effects of segregation. On April 2, the DocYard series at the Brattle Theatre screens The Order of Myths to investigate this aspect of life in the Deep South. Mobile native Margaret Brown explores historical violence and racism against the glimmering backdrop of elaborate floats and masquerade masks. The result is as picturesque as it is harrowing. Matt Nannis

Boston accents. Like an English drawing-room drama spoken in Cockney slang, The Company Men's moneyed, white-collar MBA's all drop their R's and bellow profanity like extras from The Fighter. (At West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

The Fighter ★★★ A low-budget labor of love for producer/star Mark Wahlberg, The Fighter follows The Town and Conviction in last year's Massachusetts Lampoon Show, in which glamorous movie stars drop their R's and wear tacky clothes to convey "authenticity." Blue-collar Bostonian has replaced redneck as Hollywood's white-trash signifier of choice. Based on the true story of Lowell boxing legend "Irish" Micky Ward, the film stars Wahlberg as the long-suffering anchor of a spectacularly dysfunctional family. As his troubled brother, Christian Bale bellows into the camera—bug-eyed with rotten teeth—and gives the kind of terrible performance that wins Academy Awards. But The Fighter turns out to be a pretty good movie, especially when Bale is off-screen. The film never strays too far from traditional sports-movie formula, but director David O. Russell imbues the clichés with manic energy, shooting from unexpected angles and eliciting subtle, heartfelt performances from Wahlberg and Amy Adams, who hold the center of this circus with quiet dignity. It gets better as it goes along. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Hall Pass ★ ½ The Farrelly Brothers' decade-long wallow in irrelevance continues with this sad spectacle, which stars Owen Wilson and Jason Sudeikis as a couple of dorky suburbanites granted a week's vacation from the vows of marriage by their exasperated better halves. The problem that has plagued every Farrelly movie since their twin triumphs—Kingpin and There's Something About Mary—is that the copious gross-outs feel obligatory. The brothers have been self-consciously trying to outdo the hair-gel joke since 1998, getting bigger and ruder while simultaneously neglecting the construction that made those set-pieces the stuff of legend. Shot like a sitcom, with unconvincing Georgia locations standing in for Rhode Island and the Cape, this garishly overlit film lacks any semblance of real human behavior. Outlandish flights of profanity reek of flopsweat, as if the brothers know they've been eclipsed by Judd Apatow but assume that by throwing enough pee-pee and poo-poo at the screen they might catch up. What use is spraying diarrhea all over a wall if you don't follow it up with a punch line? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Happythankyoumoreplease ★★ Languishing on the shelf since its Sundance premiere last year, How I Met Your Mother star Josh Radnor's debut feature is an instantly forgettable romantic comedy in the wannabe–Woody Allen mold. It's the kind of generic indie we see dozens of times each year, crosscutting between three couples with middling relationship problems and little at stake in an anachronistically affordable Manhattan. Radnor headlines as a struggling short-story writer, who predictably turns out to be just like every other boozy chick-magnet with commitment issues that actors-turned-filmmakers always pen for themselves to play. Competently photographed in widescreen, Happythankyoumoreplease is at best polished and pleasant, running familiar riffs on material that was already stale back when Edward Burns was rehashing it 15 years ago. Lacking a fresh sensibility or any hint of an edge, Radnor dutifully unfurls the indie-rock montage sequences, wrapping up all his storylines with predictable little bows and no acknowledgement of a world outside these beautiful people's solipsistic navel-gazing. (At Kendall Square.)

Jane Eyre ★★ There have been at least 12 big-screen adaptations of Charlotte Brontë's 1847 novel, as well as another dozen or so made for TV. Is there anything more we can gain from yet another couple hours with Jane and Mr. Rochester? Director Cary Joji Fukunaga's take is respectful, for the most part adequate and, as far as I can see, has no compelling reason to exist. Fukunaga attempts to shake up the text with some rough-hewn naturalism, fixating on the Derbyshire landscapes and overplaying the miserable weather. The shots are handheld and often underexposed, announcing from the outset that this isn't your mom's Jane Eyre. Except it really is. Once you look past the shaky-cameras and ugly costumes, there's nothing new. Luckily, Michael Fassbender is there to liven things up as the moody Rochester. Wearing unfortunate, pubic-looking sideburns, this wry Irish actor plays up the character's lazy contempt for everyone in his company. But Mia Wasikowska's Jane just blandly stands around, suffering from Fukunaga's ugly natural lighting and deliberately drab color scheme. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Just Go With It ★ ½ Every time Adam Sandler bears his soul and takes a beating at the box office, as with Punch-Drunk Love or the more recent Funny People, he follows up with another five years of blockbuster slop from his Happy Madison crap factory, which grinds out indifferently acted, lowest-common-denominator comedies at a depressingly prolific pace. This latest affront stars Sandler as a caddish plastic surgeon who, for reasons too laborious to explain, forces his long-suffering assistant (Jennifer Aniston) to pretend to be his ex-wife during a trip to Hawaii with a bodacious babe (model Brookyn Decker). Undisciplined and punishingly overlong, the movie oozes misogyny, homophobia and an overall aura of lazy contempt. The lone bright spots are Aniston's barbed line readings, probably because she seems as annoyed by the plot and abrasive characters as we are. I daresay she's never been so human and relatable onscreen. Too bad the movie only decides she's worthwhile as a person after she puts on a bikini. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The King's Speech ★★ ½ Rocky for stutterers, director Tom Hooper's film is a perfectly acceptable middlebrow diversion, the kind of British delight that hoovers up Oscars without leaving much of a lasting impression (see also: Shakespeare in Love). Colin Firth stars as stammering King George VI, who must warily assume the throne after some extramarital shenanigans by his brother throw the monarchy into crisis. Timid and tongue-tied, Firth seeks the counsel of Geoffrey Rush's oddball speech therapist, as this newfangled invention called the radio requires our leaders to be articulate. Slyly grafting an amusing anecdote onto a large historical canvas, The King's Speech feigns an importance it doesn't earn. The movie does, however, contain some nicely calibrated performances and droll asides. Too bad Hooper shoots it all with distracting fish-eye lenses and oversells the comedy before shoveling on the pathos. Still, it's harmless enough, for this kind of thing. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Limitless ★★ ½ During any other era, Bradley Cooper's entitled frat-boy smarminess would've stranded him in villain roles. Lucky for him, we live in a post-Kardashian, "winning" America, so Cooper's cheerfully amoral swagger can carry the day in an odd duck like Limitless, wherein the hero's fundamental shallowness is all part of the fun. Playing a bedraggled novelist, Cooper's brazen opportunist happens upon an experimental drug that increases the subject's brainpower tenfold. Naturally, he parlays this superheroic ability into a career of Wall Street plundering and a lifestyle of Manhattan luxury. The strained thriller machinations wear thin over time—and I'm still not exactly sure how that murder plot exactly plays out—but director Neil Burger polishes this turd to a very fine sheen (no pun intended) that's visually intoxicating. Slick and as guiltily pleasurable as a reality show, Limitless has no interest in pondering consequences or ethics. It's an adrenaline rush, as charming and vacant as the movie's own front man. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Paul ★★ Simon Pegg and Nick Frost's Shaun of the Dead did a remarkable job inserting two goofball slackers into the margins of a zombie apocalypse. It was a tricky send-up that did everything right that their latest, Paul, does wrong. Now starring as a couple of sheltered fanboys looking for UFOs on their way home from Comic-Con, Pegg and Frost (who also cowrote the script) happen upon an actual alien—one that smokes a lot of weed and sounds suspiciously like Seth Rogen. The ensuing road trip is a rather deadening laundry list of nerdy pop-cultural references, mostly content to restage sequences from classic 1980s sci-fi films. Repeating famous catchphrases and posing in familiar settings, these boys have mistaken references for jokes. Director Greg Mottola, who most recently helmed the marvelous Adventureland, has little capacity for broad farce, with gifted comedic performers like Jason Bateman, Bill Hader and Kristen Wiig salvaging stray laughs despite the inconsistent tone. The barrage of in-jokes attempts to flatter the audience, but familiarity breeds contempt. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

True Grit ★★★★ This is the Coen brothers' most conventional, accessible movie. Some people say that like it's a bad thing. In their rip-snorting, devilishly entertaining throwback to Charles Portis' 1968 novel, the Coens tell the story of Mattie Ross (dazzling newcomer Hailee Steinfeld), a young girl who hires boozy marshal Rooster Cogburn (an instantly iconic Jeff Bridges) to hunt down the no-good horse thief that done shot and killed her Pa. What follows is a strange, often violent adventure through a forbidding landscape, accompanied by Matt Damon's flat-out hilarious Texas Ranger, who is never at a loss for (entirely pointless) monologues. Shot by the brilliant cinematographer Roger Deakins in chilly, wintry tones—mostly from Mattie's point of view—True Grit is quietly assured, absent the self-conscious mythologizing of Henry Hathaway's John Wayne version of this very same yarn. There's a pitiless lack of sentiment that doesn't break until the film's final moments, at which point I frankly fell apart. Lovely. (At West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Unknown ★★★ Apparently Liam Neeson, the husky-voiced oak tree of an actor creeping up on his 60th birthday, has decided to become the next Jason Statham, knocking around a bunch of Eurotrash baddies in some slickly engineered B-pictures. This is not an unwelcome development. Like Neeson's surprise 2008 smash Taken, Unknown is shrewdly crafted Friday-night entertainment—the kind of movie that'll play forever on cable. As a botanist who suffers temporary amnesia after a car accident in Berlin, Neeson finds another man (amusingly played by his Michael Collins frenemy Aidan Quinn) stealing his identity. Conspiracies and righteous pummelings abound, as do the cardboard line readings of Mad Men's January Jones. A goofy timekiller well aware of its silliness, the film boasts fine wide-screen location work and deliciously hammy turns from Bruno Ganz and Frank Langella. The movie knows exactly what it's doing, and does it well. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Win Win ★★★ Writer/director Thomas McCarthy, known for Sundance smashes like The Station Agent and The Visitor, doesn't have a lot of challenging ideas up his sleeve. As far as I can tell, he takes a gimmicky construct and casts it wisely, drawing out fresh performances from underused actors by playing to their strengths in endearing showcase roles. There really isn't anything wrong with the formula. McCarthy's latest stars Paul Giamatti as a schlubby high school coach who accidentally ends up being foster-father to a solemn wrestling prodigy with abandonment issues. Ethical knots abound, paying lip service to troubled times in recession-addled New Jersey, but Win Win truly takes flight whenever it becomes a true underdog sports movie—scoring big laughs from simple three-shots of Giamatti, Jeffrey Tambor and the never-not-funny Bobby Cannavale as beleaguered coaches of the worst wrestling team in the Garden State. McCarthy doesn't ever get a handle on his tale's courtroom histrionics, but the loveable characters and genre payoffs make it a pleasure nonetheless. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

EPIC RENEWAL

Sharon Van Etten expands her indie-rock horizons.

Sharon Van Etten plays the Brighton Music Hall on April 14.

Mark Jasiuk

A DECADE AGO, SHARON Van Etten was a struggling Tennessee musician in a stifling five-year relationship with an unsupportive boyfriend. Today she's blossoming as an indie-rock darling, channeling that past into resonant, melancholic songs.

"I'm really lucky to be alive, and I can't believe I'm actually doing music full-time now," says the 29-year-old singer/songwriter from her current home base of Brooklyn. "I was writing in secret for so long, by the time I left, I had this overflowing of songs."

Van Etten first drew attention for her 2009 debut Because I Was in Love, 11 sad, sparse songs reminiscent of Beth Orton or early Cat Power in their folk-like fragility. Last year, she followed with the seven-song Epic, which echoed romantic travails in lines such as "Never let myself be in love like that again" and "Look me in the eyes, say you can't do it."

Despite the somber lyrics, the more confident Van Etten broadened her musical approach. Inspired by old Fleetwood Mac albums, she dipped into a combination of country twang, PJ Harvey–style rock rumble and the Eastern drone of a harmonium on various tracks. "I wanted to show more sides of me than the solo, slow, stark Sharon," says Van Etten, who envisioned the title Epic in lowercase as a play on both the record's relatively short length and the significant personal growth it required.

She's still expanding, shifting from acoustic to electric guitar in a trio with bassist Doug Keith and drummer Ben Lord that hits the Brighton Music Hall on April 14 and Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall the following night. When they're off the road, Van Etten and her band have been finishing her next album.

"I want to take it a step further," she says of the upcoming CD produced by Aaron Dessner of the rock band the National. "Now I'm going to push the experimental. It's going to be noisy. It's going to have strings. It's going to have counterintuitive arrangements."

Despite her start as an insecure songbird, Van Etten's aspirations were influenced by other sounds. She grew up in New Jersey, where she listened to classic rock, punk and musicals, and found her voice as an alto in church and school choirs. That background informs the wistful, shaded harmonies that she builds on disc.

"I was never good at sight-reading and don't know keys and time signatures, but I can hear a note and be able to sing a harmony to it, or be able to sing a bunch of harmonies to it," she says. "I was a total choir nerd, but when I first started writing, I thought it would be cool to just have guitar and vocals."

However, when she relocated to Tennessee, initially to study recording, Van Etten says, "Sad, slow solo music was nowhere to be found." Still, in the wake of relationship woes, she found comfort in her stream-of-consciousness writing.

"It's more about the melody and the raw emotion when I first field something, and I get it out because I don't know how to talk about it," she says. "I come across [a song] years later and it's like looking at an old photograph, and I learn from that and I heal."

A clean break helped when she moved home to New Jersey. "I was feeling really uncomfortable and nothing seemed familiar," Van Etten says. Attending a concert in New York, she recognized opener Kyp Malone, not as a member of the band TV on the Radio, but as a connection from home. "His brother was the first person who made me play guitar," she says of Malone, who introduced her to the Brooklyn scene. "So it was like stars in alignment."

Supporters soon extended to the National and Bon Iver's Justin Vernon (who jointly covered her song "Love More"), and eventually her new bandmates. "I'm learning to rely on other people," Van Etten says. "I'm learning how to let go a little bit." ✖✖✖

31 DAYS TO MAKE A DIFFERENCE

HELP PROVIDE THE LASTING GIFT OF CLEAN WATER

March 22nd - April 22nd,
World Water Day to Earth Day,
"31 Days to Make a Difference"™

Voss water proudly supports the efforts of the Voss Foundation, providing access to clean drinking water to Sub-Saharan African communities. The Voss Foundation helps meet these needs through a unique approach, ensuring local ownership and long-term sustainability through partnerships with trusted local organizations, and use of appropriate technology and systems that assess the multiple water needs of a community.

Wails From the Crypt

Staying the Corpse Brooklyn-based trio Tombs would rather push up daisies than stop rocking. Front man Mike Hill twists his Boston-bred passion for hardcore rhythms into a heavy-metal mind warp with the help of Andrew Hernandez and Carson James. Classic breakdowns and thundering climaxes disrupt lengthy stretches of melodious instrumentality to make for broody, thrashing songs. Their number is up on April 1 at Worcester's Club Oasis. Hilary White

Museums & Galleries

Say "Fromage!"

Highly Impressionable Armen James set out to capture the vibrant textures, landscapes and architecture of the South of France with his camera. His latest exhibit, French Impressions, is inspired by masters like Renoir and Monet. Taken during a two-week stay in 2009, the self-taught artist shot images embodying the region's history and intensity. The photographs are on display April 2–30 at the French Cultural Center.

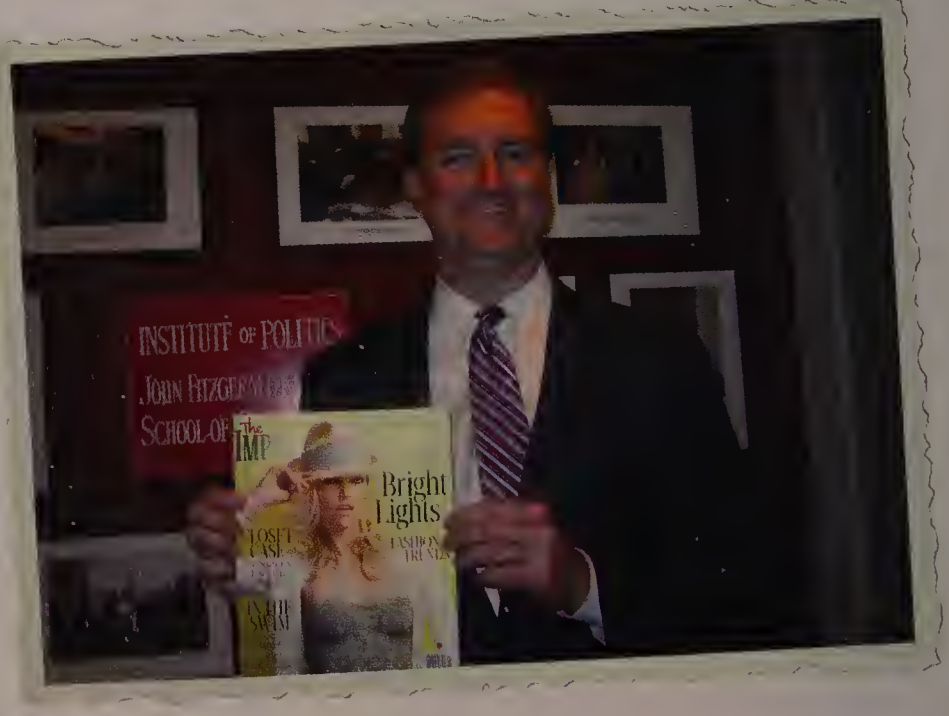
BONUS POINTS (AND A SIDE OF SHRIMP) TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER GETTING AN EARFUL AT THE 25TH ANNUAL WORLD GRITS FESTIVAL IN ST. GEORGE, S.C., APRIL 8–10.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you went. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.



Alison Monger hit the beach with her kids in Half Moon Cay, Bahamas. Instead of swim lessons, she made them find their own way back to the cruise ship.

Tom Hans, DG Boulette, Dean Roberts, Arjel Falcon, DJ DeJimenez and Chris Kellam can't camouflage their Improper pride in Kandahar, Afghanistan.

Susan and Buzz Di-Martino flew thousands of miles away to the Gibbs Organic Coffee Farm in Karatu, Tanzania, but found they were still just a couple blocks away from a Dunkin' Donuts.

AXE TO GRIND

Cadavers R Us

Historic New England hosted a Preview Party for its first annual Decorator Showhouse at the Lizzie Borden B&B/Museum in Fall River (which it acquired from the financially strapped owners), transforming the defunct (and controversial) inn into an interior designer's wet dream.

Among the international names who participated were second-generation New York giant Alexa Hampton, accompanied by her stunning mother, Duane, Latin hotties Manuel de Santaren and Carolina Tress Balsbaugh and West Coast taste-maker Hutton Wilkinson, while the guest list included latter-day Ricky Ricardo Juan Prieto, porcelain beauty Trevania Henderson, yummy mummy Molly Dunne, the ubiquitous Arthur and Alicia Winn, iconoclastic Brahmin Sukey Forbes Bigham, Texas babe Biddy Owens and the dapper Bob, and a woman who said, "I'm not getting design inspiration, but I am getting a few ideas of what I'd like to do to my in-laws."

Some of the designers had fun with the house's macabre history (blood-red walls in the living room and axes over the dining-room fireplace), but otherwise the whole thing erred on the side of tastefulness. As one guest put it: "A couple of dead bodies would liven up the place."

Hot 'N' Spicy or Honey BBQ?

It was a multinapkin, finger-lickin' fun affair when the Museum of Fine Arts and the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum joined forces to host the Great Boston Wing Competition under a giant tent on the Fenway.

The stakes were high. Guests got to vote on the chicken (which ranged in heat from the merely jerked to habañero hot, and in color from Thousand Island orange to a shade of red not found in nature), and also on which museum's bazillion-dollar expansion is better: the MFA's new Norman Foster–designed Art of the Americas Wing or the Gardner's Renzo Piano–designed addition.

Both Pritzker-prizewinning architects were there, mixing and mingling with the likes of über-philanthropist Barbara Hostetter and her cable-magnate husband, Amos, the extended Shapiro clan—most notably Chestnut Hellions Linda and Dan Waintrup and the Strauss girls, Sam and Kim, assorted Fidelity Johnsons (Lillie, Ned, Ed, Beth and Abby), Cantabrigian grande dame Ann Gund, her famous architect husband, Graham, and senatorial spouse Gale Huff with her husband, Scott Brown (looking slightly underdressed in his barn coat). Among the cooks competing: Ken Oringer, Michael Schlow, Ming Tsai, Joanne Chang and Juan Saldana, who isn't even a professional chef. Still, he won the taste test, although there was talk of disqualifying him once guests learned that his wings were actually cui, or guinea pig, a delicacy in his native Peru.

Duane Hampton and Bunny Williams at the Historic New England Decorator Showhouse

Joanna Prager at the Zoo New England gala

Joanna Humphrey at the Zoo New England gala

Michael Schlow and Evan Deluty at the Great Boston Wing Competition

April Soderstrom and Ming Tsai at the Great Boston Wing Competition

As for which museum won, the competition was a draw, after someone who identified herself only as "Mrs. Jack" stuffed the ballot box with votes for the Institute of Contemporary Art.

It's a Jungle Out There

Zoo New England hosted its annual black-tie gala inside the African Savannah Pavilion at the Stone Zoo. Instead of a predictable safari theme, it opted to go with "Yeti and Sasquatch." Consequently, the fun began early, when nearly all the guests descended on iParty to buy their costumes, but the drinking didn't begin in earnest until everyone was gathered 'round the kegs at the cocktail reception.

Spotted among the throng: pre-facelift socialites Joanna Prager, Julia Owens, Julie Hume Gordon, Laura Baldini, Joanna Humphrey and Ashley Bernon, the naturally ageless Doris Yaffe, Harvard president Drew Gilpin Faust, prize-winning writers Dick and Doris Goodwin, literary agent (and offspring of eccentric English press baron Lord Rothermere and a Texas oil heiress) Esmond Harmsworth, his other half, sailing champ Jim Richardson, animal-loving real estate scion Bruce Beal, Napoleonic potentate Dick Friedman and his flawless wife, Nancy, and one woman who said, "I was going to wear a fur coat, and then I remembered I'd done that at an MSPCA event and it didn't go over so well."

Unfortunately, the evening was cut short when a lion escaped its enclosure and mauled diminutive party boy Joshua Janson, an incident blamed on lax security, the victim's filet-mignon breath and the fact that he was taunting the beast. In any case, not since the Perkins School for the Blind's Pin the Tail on the Donkey Tournament has an event ended so abruptly. The Bristol Lounge at the Four Seasons will be observing a moment of silence, while the liquor store on the corner of Clarendon and Dartmouth is accepting donations to cover Janson's medical expenses.

Domesticity

A Neolithic hunter-gatherer is waiting for the Green Line. "So I've been having problems with my megafauna," he says to the other commuters, who tense and lean slightly toward the edge of the platform. "You can cross the Taurus Mountains these days without so much as spearing an aurochs. And the Younger Dryas climate event is doing a number on the easily foraged cereals. The wife says we should settle down and construct a permanent dwelling."

"Don't do it, buddy," says a nearby poststructural anthropologist. "Sedentism is way overrated. Just leads to agriculture, social divisions and a really boring diet of emmer wheat."

The hunter-gatherer sighs. "I know. But what are you gonna do? Once you've accepted the conceptual separation of the home from the wild, Hodder's duality of domus versus agrios, there's no going back, is there?"

"First it's the invention of the wattle roof, next you're spending weekends at Ikea," warns the anthropologist. "Sure, setting up house is tempting. Leads to wealth, population, urbanism. Gives you a place to put your stuff. But then you're stuck with priest kings and institutionalized violence. And don't get me started on gender inequity."

"But I saw this nice coffee table at Mitchell Gold," says the hunter-gatherer. "Besides, with a house, we can cultivate art, maybe even literacy. Surely that's worth putting up a few curtains." The anthropologist shrugs and wanders off in a haze of systems theory.

In this issue, we peek inside the kitchens of five super chefs and Ezra goes mano a mano with a wet saw.

STRENGTH IN NUMBERS

SUSAN HURLEY HAS raced blindfolded. She's completed the Ironman in Hawaii, the endurance event in which 26.2 miles comprise the home stretch. Looking for another challenge, in 2008 she recruited and trained 20 runners to run the Boston Marathon for the Lazarus House, raising $130,000. Now with her own company, Charity Teams, the former Patriots cheerleader works with other nonprofits and more than 100 charitably-minded runners. This month, Hurley will complete her sixth Boston Marathon, drumming up more than $600,000 with her teammates. "I explain this will be a journey for you," Hurley says. "April 18th, this year, will be one of the best days of your life."

The grand reopening of Qingdao Garden demands a celebratory dish beyond its famed dumplings and fiery fish stew. Ordering the off-menu special requires a three-day notice, but it provides a more refined take on the typical Cantonese roast. Under crisp, meat-candy skin, tender cuts of pork boast the nuances of a secret family recipe. ELIZABETH BOMZE

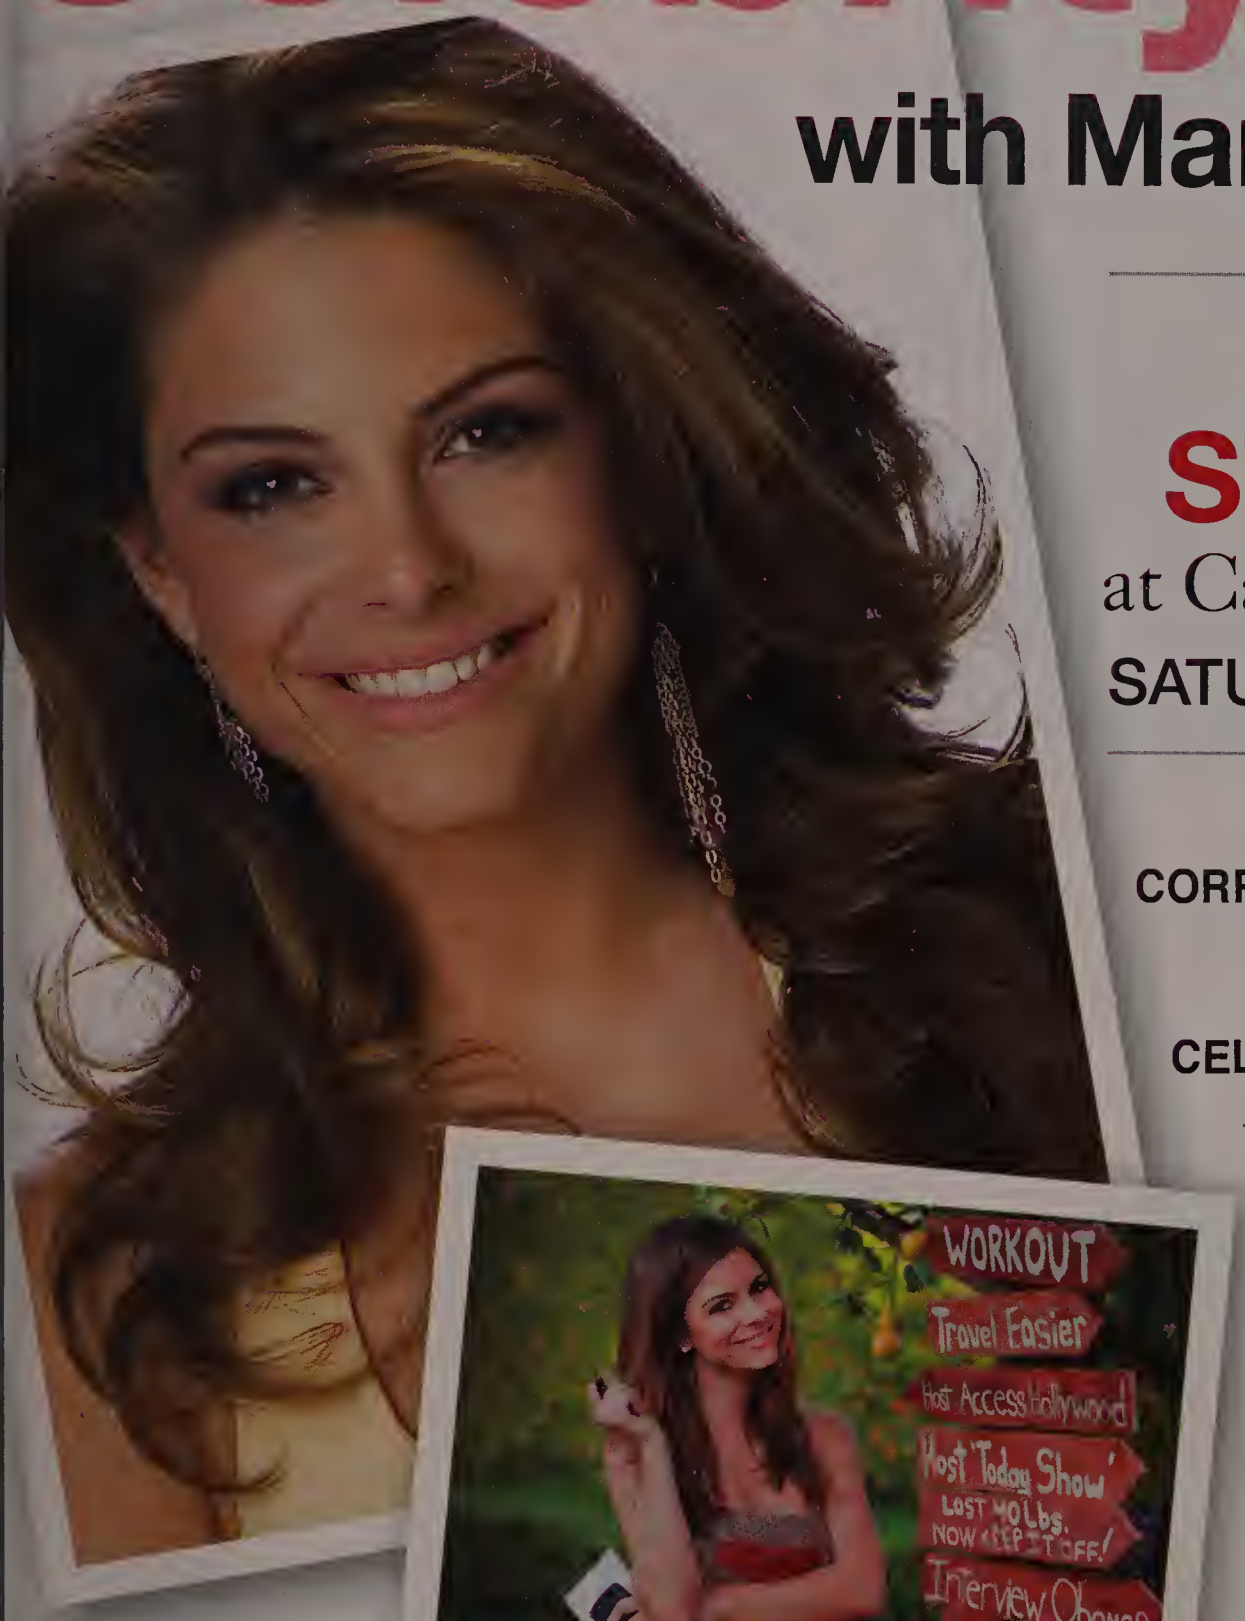
Behind the Oak Room rumors

WELL-AGED The Oak Room is getting a facelift.

YOU'VE PROBABLY HEARD the rumor: The storied Oak Room at the Fairmont Copley Plaza is being taken over by the same people who designed Lolita Cocina & Tequila Bar in the Back Bay. New proprietors, it's feared, will bathe the formal dining room in lurid red light and run roughshod over the dignified—if perhaps overripe—decor.

Not so fast. The company hired by the Fairmont—Connecticut-based CB5 Restaurant Group—did indeed design Lolita (as well as Bar 10 at the Westin and the late Ivy). But company president Jody Pennette says there's "no connection" between the projects. "Lolita is a very small reflection" of the company's capabilities, he says, adding in exasperation that Bostonians seem to be expecting piñatas. "We have a wild side, but we won't whip it out for this," Pennette states.



Acknowledging that the Oak Room is "precious to many," and given that the restaurant still does a respectable amount of business, the facelift may ultimately be limited to new wallpaper and a fall menu. "Stuffiness can be refreshed," Pennette says. "We've got to be careful; there's no way to miss a bullet on this one." In short, it's a make-over, not a takeover.

YET ANOTHER TAPAS PLACE is opening in the fall, this time in Somerville's Union Square. According to sources, Casa B will offer a "modern interpretation of a traditional Spanish tasca."

YOU KNEW Joanne Chang's Flour cookbook was hot, but did you know it ran through three printings in six months? With success comes opportunity, and Chang has taken up her pen to write a second work.

HALL OF FAME

When Todd Hall talks about Temazcal Tequila Cantina, it's with a confidence that can almost be mistaken for arrogance. But the James Beard award winner brings 23 years of experience to his Liberty Wharf spot, having received international acclaim for introducing Scottsdale, Ariz., to authentic Mexican cuisine at La Hacienda. "When people try the food, they're going to love it," says Hall. "What Bostonians think is Mexican is actually Tex-Mex. This is totally new to the area."

"THIS KIND OF MEXICAN FOOD IS UNFAMILIAR."

Hall, grouping himself with chefs like Diana Kennedy and Rick Bayless, is at least partially responsible for the Mexican trend. His dedication to authenticity means that many of the ingredients at Temazcal—like squash blossoms, huitlacoche and banana leaves—will be imported from afar. "A big part of why Boston hasn't been able to experience this kind of food is because the components aren't available from distributors," he says.

Temazcal's menu features familiar dishes like enchiladas and tacos, but it's not typical take-out fare. "I think people are scared when they see the differences," Hall says. "This kind of Mexican food is so unfamiliar. We want to teach them, make it easy for them to see what they're getting." His solution: iPad menus. The first of their kind, the tablets host a patented app that Hall hopes to bring to other restaurants. Eaters can flip through photos of dishes, read ingredients and calorie counts and even culinary origins. But he's quick to assert they won't be a substitute for service. "The iPads are just tools and guides. You won't find anybody ordering off them in one of my restaurants."

This high-tech turn might be helpful in navigating dishes like lechón asado ($32), a whole-roasted suckling pig carved tableside, and cabrito ($30), roasted goat dressed with tart grapefruit juice and molasses. Even quesadillas defy expectations. "A quesadilla is basically the Mexican alternative to pizza," Hall explains. "Most of the time, the tortillas that people use are at least 30 days old. Would you want to eat a 30-day-old pizza crust?"

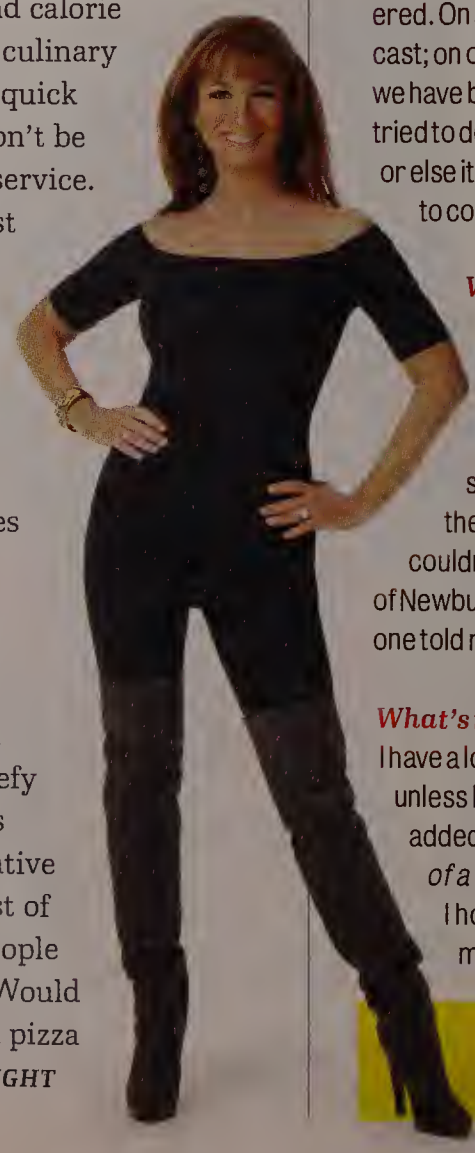
House Call

GETTING REAL

Interior stylist, author and shapewear designer Jill Zarin stars in The Real Housewives of New York City, now in its fourth season on Bravo. She returns to Simmons College, her alma mater, on April 25 to participate in its annual Leadership Conference.



Did you join* The Housewives *with the idea that you wanted to be a mogul?
[Laughs.] I love being called a mogul! I certainly joined the cast with the intent to promote Zarin Fabrics. I went to Simmons for retail management and worked with Filene's and Jordan Marsh. The benefit of being on a reality show is that you get to promote your life.

What's new for season four?
It's completely different. There was so much fighting and darkness. Bethenny [Frankel] was leaving to do her own show. She wanted to just be done with it and start her life over and forget about everything that happened. Now the black cloud has lifted. This season was the most fun I've had filming yet, by far. We fight, but it's never dark. I miss my playdates with the other ladies when we aren't filming.

Do you think they'll ever do a* Real Housewives of Boston*?
No. You know, we have the Northeast covered. On some of [the shows], it's about the cast; on others, it's about the location. I think we have both. So does Beverly Hills. If they tried to do Boston, they'd need a killer cast or else it would just look like they were trying to compete with New York.

What are some of your best memories of Boston?
I came up last year for my 25th college anniversary. We had our commencement at the Ritz, so I thought it would be fun to stay there. We were driving around and we couldn't find it! I insisted it was at the end of Newbury Street and not Downtown. No one told me that it was gone!

What's next for you?
I have a lot of offers, but I can't do something unless I'm passionate about it. We just added a new chapter to my book [Secrets of a Jewish Mother] about bullying. I hope that people read it, and it makes an impact. KYLE WRIGHT

Wine

Age Before Beauty

If you have access to a cellar, and you plan on staying put for the foreseeable future, storing a few special bottles can elevate your wine appreciation to a new level. Relatively few wines improve with age and most are released for sale "ready to drink," but it's a misconception that only the most expensive and heartiest reds are ideal cellar candidates. If stored properly—in a dark place below 60 degrees with humidity of about 65 percent—the following relative bargain wines each have potential to provide a stellar tasting experience five, or even 10, years down the road.

Domaine de la Pepiere, "Clos des Briords" Muscadet de Sevre et Maine sur lie, 2009 ($16, Wine & Cheese Cask). Muscadet's well-earned reputation as a light, crisp wine to drink within a few years of production is only a part of the story. The region's best wines share enormous aging capacity. With a whiff of sea air and brisk mineral-like flavors balanced between lemon and green apple, this wine can be enjoyed now or held onto for, yes, 10 years. At that point, the humble muscadet takes on fleshiness and expresses a range of subtleties only hinted at now.

Sybille Kuntz, Estate Riesling "Trocken" Mosel, 2008 ($17, Vinodivino). This bone-dry riesling features crisp acidity and a sharp bite of citrus. I call it riesling for the sauvignon blanc lover. Sweeter rieslings are noted for their ageability, but the structure of this wine will also give it a good five-year ride, during which time its petrol-like earthiness will further emerge.

Domaine du Viking, "Tendre" Vouvray, 2009 ($21, Bauer Wine). Another Loire Valley standout, this estate chenin blanc has it all: honey and pear aromas, sugar balanced with vibrant acids and a long mineral-like finish. It's irresistibly delicious now, but will one day be practically immortal. I've recently had Vouvrays of this quality from the 1950s that still showed plenty of life.

J.P. Brun, Domaine Terres Dorées, Morgon, 2009 ($20, Wine Bottega). The 2009 vintage was historically great in Beaujolais, and the best wines, such as this estate-bottled "cru," feature masses of red fruit, firm acids and an uncharacteristic note of chocolatey spice. Morgon is one of the top villages for aging, and this velvet-textured wine has at least 10 years ahead of it, at which point it'll start tasting more like pinot noir as the soft-spice undertones develop greater clarity.

Muga Reserva Rioja, 2006 ($33, Cambridge Wine & Spirits). One of the classic producers of Rioja, this Reserva balances bold tobacco and red-berry qualities with smooth textures and somewhat chalky spice-accented tannins. It's fully enjoyable now but will repay another five to seven years of patience, during which time its flavors will become more subdued while latent complexities of the fruit and oak appear.

What's your ultimate recipe for a Marathon Monday party?

ASK THE EXPERT

CREATORS OF BIGGIRLSSMALLKITCHEN.COM AND AUTHORS OF IN THE SMALL KITCHEN

AS AN OBSERVER, you'll need food that'll stick to your ribs as you watch runner after runner speed by. We suggest making a variety of dips for your marathon party, each served with a different vehicle for dipping—like pita or potato chips, baguette rounds and raw vegetables. Finger-food parties work well in small urban spaces like ours, and they're good for young people with busy lives. KYLE WRIGHT

PANKO-CRUSTED SPINACH DIP

Makes 10 to 15 servings

FOR THE DIP

Three 16-ounce bags	frozen spinach, defrosted and drained
1 cup	sour cream
½ cup	mayonnaise
⅔ cup	grated Parmesan cheese
½ teaspoon	crushed red-pepper flakes
2 cloves	garlic, minced
1 teaspoon	salt
Two 8-ounce packages	cream cheese, room temperature

FOR THE TOPPING

¼ cup	panko
¼ teaspoon	salt
¼ cup	grated Parmesan cheese

NOTE: The first half of the recipe can be made in advance and kept in the refrigerator for up to two days.

1. Preheat the oven to 350°F. 2. In a mixing bowl, combine the spinach, sour cream, mayonnaise, Parmesan, red pepper flakes, garlic and salt. Add the cream cheese and stir until all the ingredients are fully incorporated. Pour the mixture into a cast-iron skillet or ovenproof baking dish. 3. Combine the topping ingredients in a small bowl. Sprinkle the topping over the dip in an even layer. 4. Bake for 20 minutes, until bubbling. Raise the heat to 450°F and bake for another 5 to 10 minutes, until the top is golden brown. Serve immediately with tortilla chips.

Drink of the Moment

Going Green

With the approach of spring, Michael Florence's thoughts turned toward herbs. The Pigalle bar manager's twist on the classic Last Word, ↙ HULLABALOO SOUP ($14) features Death's Door gin, green Chartreuse, lime juice and a delicate garnish of grapefruit rind. It's more potent than it looks. Chartreuse, made from 130 blooms and spices, mingles with the gin's juniper and botanical notes for an assertive kick.

Florence, a Kentucky native, asserts that he's a "bartender, not a mixologist." Watch him at work, though, and his modesty is betrayed by his knowledge of cocktail history, technique and his ease with experimentation. Much like spring itself, the Hullabaloo Soup plays on the senses. Florence lightly swabs the glass rim with oil from a grapefruit peel. The crisp, bitter smell of the peel overwhelms the nose. "Aromatics are hugely important in my drinks," he says.

House-made chamomile simple syrup adds a subtle, even feminine, touch that counters the gin's harshness. A citrusy, nearly-sweet entry segues into a dry, pucker-inducing tartness. Mid-palate, the cocktail's acidity makes the mouth water. This sensation lingers through the finish, with powdery and spicy floral tones.

After imbibing, I felt emboldened to stroll through the Common, envisioning the soon-to-be grassy promenade. Spring was on its way. And I had just enjoyed a sunny taste of it.

SOLE TRAIN

TO THE WEARER OF THE BROWN TOM'S SHOES: I sat next to you at Park Street, waiting for an Ashmont train a few weeks ago. I noticed we were both wearing Tom's, and eventually you picked up on it, too. I was hoping you'd have enough courage to mention it to me. Thankfully, you did. I sat across from you, hoping to catch a passing glance so I could throw out a flirty smile. Much to my surprise, you got off at the same stop as me. I have seen you several times since and would love to give you that flirty smile… maybe even learn your name.

For the blonde barfly at Tico:

What an experience my friends and I had watching you guard the back of your seat at the bar like a selfish child unwilling to share her toy. On three or four occasions people asked politely if they could put their coat on the back of your chair. You shouted and rudely directed them to the coatroom. You may think that you're a princess, but no one agrees. You and your friend are in those chairs every weekend. Women like you are what make a Saturday night in Boston miserable. Next time, maybe just stay home?

The general public

To Andrew Rimas:

Could your letters from the editor be any more miserable? What started as quaint, self-deprecating humor has blown right by the "borderline-depressing-yet-funny" notes to full-on "you-need-help" mode. If you're really so down in the dumps, quit venting to your readers and get a therapist. Talking it out can do a man good. Here to help

A complex tale of a falsely-accused priest

IT'D BE EASY TO MAKE THIS story a tawdry read. Jennifer Haigh's latest tells the tale of Art, a kindhearted Boston priest who befriends Aidan, a lonely boy with a druggy mother. Again proving her talent for creating complex characters and expressing their individual viewpoints and language, Haigh avoids the sensational.

Catholic faith flows in various colors and intensities: Father Art, whose own father disappeared, embraced his vocation early, as it kept him safe from the secular world. That is, until he is falsely accused of abuse. Old-style Catholic Ma is tightly wrapped in her own belief (and supportive denial) when the accusation comes. Art's rougher, tougher brother Mike, whose Lutheran wife regards the scandal

Faith
By Jennifer Haigh

Haigh lives in the Boston area.

cynically, also condemns him. And hovering over the narrative is Art's half-sister Sheila, whose own bruised sensibility and intelligent ambivalence make her a shadow of her priest brother, alternately believing and doubting the horrifying claims. That Art, once a sensitive boy, was himself priest-abused doesn't make him an abuser. But it's Art's connection to Aidan's mother, Kath—with her confused life as a damaged, tattooed stripper and her disturbing use of his vulnerability—that is the dark heart of this compelling, multilayered novel. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 166: "The parking lot was dead at that hour. He approached the empty playground. The slide and climbing bars cast odd shadows in the floodlights; the swings blew, creaking, in the wind. At the foot of the slide lay a child-size Red Sox cap, like the one Aidan wore. Art picked it up and tucked it into his pocket.

Furtively he crossed the parking lot. He had never stolen anything in his life. At the front door he stopped short. A handbill had been taped to the front door. 'HAVE YOU SEEN THIS MAN?'"

MEAT AT THE BAR Choucroute garnie with pork loin and Frankfurter sausage is served all day.

FOR 30 YEARS, HOSTESS ANN Robert welcomed diners to the elegantly appointed Maison Robert in old City Hall. Her husband, Lucien, turned out palate-pleasing Gallic classics in the kitchen. When Maison Robert closed upon Lucien's retirement in 2004, local Francophiles despaired, but not for long. Soon Lucien's nephew Jacky opened his first Petit Robert in Kenmore Square. Success spawned two more of the eponymous bistros, one in the South End and one in Needham. Last fall, Jacky opened a fourth, Petit Robert Central, in Downtown Crossing.

The second-floor space is open and airy, with large windows looking out on Summer Street. A divider separates booths from the 25-seat bar, but it's not high enough to shield diners from the TVs—a jarring departure from the ambience of an authentic bistro. It's a departure echoed, too, by a few culinary lapses.

Meals began magnificently with bread baked from dough imported from Quebec. To accompany, I recommend the plump, sweet mussels ($13), which came in a delectable broth redolent of leeks, parsley and a touch of garlic. A trio of pâtés ($10) consisted of coarse, robustly flavored country terrine; smooth, sweet-savory chicken liver pâté, and salt-cured pork rillette. House-made brandade ($12), served in a small ramekin, sported ideal spicing and a pleasantly crusty top. Last, but far from least, a superb lobster bisque ($10) boasted generous shards of lobster and an intensely flavorful broth enriched with sweet cream.

Stopping in for lunch, I ordered choucroute garnie ($19) from Petit Robert's all-day dinner menu. This included pork loin and a frankfurter, both liberally seasoned with juniper berries. While choucroute itself looks like sauerkraut—sour, shredded cabbage beloved of ballparks and street vendors—it's a staple of French brasseries and, cooked well, can be a work of art. Baked with carrots, onions and cured pork, it absorbs sweetness from the first two ingredients and smokiness from the last. Petit Robert's version, though, can be charitably described as ascetic. Slightly dry and undercooked, perhaps due to ordering it early in the day, it was only saved by the juicy pork loin and sausage.

Another gastronomic lapse was a listing of cheeses among the appetizers, which would strike any Frenchman as bizarre. Less forgivable, though, were the unimaginative and repetitive garnishes. Mashed potatoes have their place, but to find them alongside three of your four entrees is sheer culinary sloth. Moreover, crowding soupy mashed potatoes alongside or underneath the meat plays havoc with textures. My sautéed calf's liver ($18) was flavorful but mushy. A roasted leg of rabbit ($20), with very little meat on a lot of bone, suffered the same consequence.

Then came redemption in the scallops Provençale ($20), the sweetness of which contrasted wonderfully with the acidity of tomatoes. A magnificent beef tenderloin au poivre (at a very well-priced $20) escaped the mashed potato trap, as we had the presence of mind to opt for French fries instead. Despite congealed hollandaise, an à la carte order of asparagus ($7) proved a relief from the monotonous train of undercooked broccoli that accompanied the liver. And the rabbit. And the scallops.

Petit Robert recovered beautifully at dessert, though. Tarte tatin ($8), an upside-down apple confection topped with crème fraîche, proved flawless. Pricey wines, with only a couple bottles under $30, lowered the quality-to-price ratio, but Petit Robert still offers good value. A leisurely lunch spent over mussels and pâté at the bar would be tough to improve. ✖✖✖

Lunacy and the case of the $1,000 dinner

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

IN SUPERNATURAL LORE, a full moon leads to all sorts of craziness. In fact, the very word "lunacy" derives from "lunar" and the belief that the moon can drive you nuts. Personally, I don't buy into the superstitious notion that the moon makes you crazy. But my dog does.

Recently, you may recall that a particularly close orbit resulted in a so-called super moon. That night, Heather and I go out to dinner, and when we return we find the upstairs office in total disarray. A trash can is overturned, papers and empty coffee cups are strewn about the floor, evidence that our Labrador-basset-hound mutt, Dino, had been in the grips of major lunacy while we were away.

That kind of thing is pretty standard for Dino, whose large nose and small brain regularly compel him to ransack rooms in pursuit of alluring scents. Fortunately, I soon spot the object of his attack: a bottle of Advil, chewed up and empty. It had been zipped inside a toiletry kit, itself buried within a carry-on bag. But he found it, pried it open and ingested nearly a full bottle of ibuprofen, executing the bad-dog equivalent of an Oceans Eleven–style heist.

A small amount of Advil is probably OK for a dog, but a full bottle is bad news. I immediately start squirting hydrogen peroxide down his throat to make him vomit, per the advice of the emergency vet. Unfortunately for our other dog, Manny, we can't be absolutely sure who ate the Advil (it was Professor Plum in the library!), so he gets the peroxide cocktail, too. After seven tablespoons, he still refuses to throw up—possibly out of sheer resentment—so I let him off the hook. Manny spends the rest of the night farting, which means he has more fun than the rest of us.

Even though Dino fully upchucks his dinner (and presumably the pills along with it), we aren't done. The vet wants him to come in. It's now 10 pm on Saturday night. So Heather packs him in the car and calls two hours later with the diagnosis: The situation is grave. Gravely expensive.

"They can keep him overnight, but it's $2,000," Heather says. Well, sorry, Dino. I haven't drawn a hard line on how much I'll spend to save a dog, but I'm quite certain that $2,000 is considerably above that line.

Think that's funny? Send unbiased e-mails to ezra@improper.com.

Even the amount we've already committed to the Dino Preservation Fund—$765 for the midnight vet visit and some stomach-coating medications—is a galling amount to spend. Somewhere in Nicaragua, a child with a cleft palate is saying, "Señor, you could've spent that money on my operation, but I suppose that you had to save your only pet. He is, after all, your sole cherished dog. What is that you say? He is your second dog? I see."

Heather calls later with the diagnosis: The situation is grave. Gravely expensive.

After a few more tests, the tab is up to $900. Think about all the fun things you could do with $900. Maybe buy a couple of tickets to Miami for the weekend. Or perhaps you've heard of the Zombie of Montclaire Moors, a tasteful statue available from SkyMall for a mere $89.95? I could've bought, like, 10 zombies, or maybe five zombies and three Garden Yetis (those are more expensive). Or, you know, there's the charity thing. To compromise, I'll leave the SkyMall zombies to a deserving charity in my will. In any case, our little trip out to dinner cost an even $1,000—$100 for the food, and the rest because of what Moron Dog did while we were out eating it.

A couple of days later, Dino is still alive and seemingly none the worse for wear, but the fun isn't over. He's now on an elaborate medication regimen—two pills, three times a day. One pill has to be dissolved in water and administered with a syringe an hour before eating. The other has to be chopped in half and can't be taken within an hour of the first. Oh, and you've got to wear rubber gloves and thoroughly clean up the dust after you've divided the latter medication, because it has a minor adverse side effect—it causes miscarriages. And of course, the dog that created this situation by eating a stockpile of pills naturally refuses to swallow any more, running away when he sees you grab the bottle labeled "Doggie Tummy Medicine/Abortion Tablets." It's a good time all around.

According to Yahoo, the next super moon is Nov. 14, 2016. If Dino's still dimly treading the Earth on that date, I'm locking him in a cage and letting him deal with his lunar issues in a controlled environment. This whole thing—from the money to the stress to the activated-charcoal puke on our bedroom floor—has been a major headache. I could use some Advil but, you know. ✖✖✖

THE GOLD COAST

A visit to the land of Captain Money

MANY BOSTONIANS winter in Palm Beach, even though it's one of the three most insecure places in America (the other two being Beverly Hills and East Hampton). Why insecure? Because money first, glamour second. Many Palm Beachers can't get over the idea that the people at the next table may have millions more than they do. It's a numbers game, and it makes people crazy. So I thought a 2011 update in the land where Bernie Madoff roamed would be timely, as we supposedly emerge from the "Great Recession."

I always take the pulse of a resort town by shooting the breeze with service people: cabbies, shopkeepers and waitresses. Then I talk to my friends and clients to get the high-end gossip. Our cabbie from the airport told me, "I'm a conflicted guy. Part of me says 'Bring the rich people down.' Then part of me says, 'Keep 'em rich, so I can make a living.'"

"So how's biz?" I asked.

"Fair," the driver said. "Such horrible weather up north, you'd think they'd flock here. But it's been so difficult getting out, they stay home. If you're looking for real estate, everything's 40 to 60 percent off from three years ago. At least the stuff under five million. America's on sale. But I don't care. I'm just trying to stay alive."

This theme was echoed, but more positively, by a woman running the gift shop at our hotel. "How's biz?" I asked, again.

"Mezza mez," she told me. "We're not supposed to say that. We're supposed to say it's great. The weather's great, but business is fair. Better than last year, but still... tough." She paused. "I'm really in the real estate business. But I'm here to bring in a paycheck."

"What's the future?" I asked.

She smiled. "You have to reinvent yourself," she said. "Do what you have to do. Everything's in cycles. Give it some time. I'll be making six figures selling apartments again. Glass half full. But today, can I sell you a bathing suit?"

My wife and I had dinner on Worth Avenue with Franco, my energy guru, who insisted on ordering an expensive Antinori wine. Franco is a short man with slicked-back blond hair, Guccis without socks and brilliance about geopolitical matters, if you take a highly conservative road.

"It's over for us," Franco said. "Unless we get our tails in gear. In Iraq we invested a trillion dollars. And we get nothing. We import 14 million barrels of oil a day. And we're consuming 20 million barrels. The dollar's goin' down the drain. So you gotta own oil and gas and Canadian tar sands and gold if you own anything at all." He had a young lady with him, as blonde as Franco, not smiling, even though I picked up the tab.

My wife and I, whenever we're on this island, always find a way to dine with Captain Money. His college classmates gave him this name, claiming that his family owned Cincinnati or "one of those cities no one ever visits." He joined us at one of his watering holes: pink jacket, white linen shirt, loose Hermès tie. He pointed to it and said, "Devil may care."

"What's happening in Moneyland?" I asked.

"Here's what the Bostonians down here tell me. One woman from Brookline sat next to me at a party. Half the meal she tells me about taking her dog to a psychiatrist. The other half she's complaining about not being able to find a cook who can make a decent brown sauce."

"You're dumping on that? You live the same way."

"Yeah," he laughed. "But I inherited money. Her husband made it, and they both went lah-dee-dah, the King and Queen. No way to act, if you made it yourself. Like out of Masterpiece Theatre, 'Yes, m'lord. Yes, m'lady.' People see through that like a window."

It was high season here. But the stores seemed quiet, with salespeople trying not to look bored. The high-end restaurants and hotels were never full. "Bernie Madoff and the economy are still taking their toll down here," Captain Money added. "People have lost their houses, parents moving in with children who resent them moving in, resent that the parents lost their eventual inheritance. Money, or lack of it, bringing out the worst in people." Captain Money sipped a flute of prosecco. "Here's the irony of Bernie, however," he added. "I went to one of the museums for a reception last night. Big givers have their names all over the rooms. For some of the givers, most of the money for art came from distributions from Madoff. A lot of space on American hospitals and museums should be renamed 'The Madoff and Assorted Victims' Ward.'

"Here's the deal with most rich people: They want to rub elbows with the guys in the locker bay at the country club. Gossip about a hot money guy in the locker bay means whoever listens in, wants in. It's the eternal quest to be 'in with the in crowd.'" Captain Money twirled an index finger at a waiter. "Prosecco encore."

Here are two last images from Palm Beach, the place "where the tall dogs pee," according to my brother-in-law. Being a school holiday at the time of our trip, there were dozens of kids all over the hotel. On our first morning, I saw three little girls no older than 12. They each charged a bathing suit, candy and designer water at $4 a bottle. Various stations around the hotel offered water free. And they never deigned to notice the woman serving them. No thanks, no notice, jabbering away at the pleasures to come. I saw behavior like this throughout our stay—mannerless, rude and, my least favorite word, entitled. These young folk will learn a lot in the years to come. Much of it not to their liking.

On our last day, I was in the business center, checking e-mails. I couldn't log on, and the attendant was stumped as well. Four little kids were playing on the floor. One boy jumped up. "I can get you in," he said. Tap, tap, tap, tap, he went… and in I went. "How old are you?" I asked.

"Ten," he answered. The attendant was so amazed, she never charged me for the computer use. I did my business, logged off and thanked the little boy, giving him a buck.

"That's it?" he responded. Captain Money, and much of Palm Beach, would've been proud. ×××

ON CRAWFORD, KEMBA AND THE MARATHON

5 EARLY SOX THOUGHTS

WAIT AND SEE Crawford will find his comfort zone.

Crazy Carl What an insane start for Carl Crawford. He has two bad games and Francona drops him to seventh in the lineup, followed by days of angry radio callers wondering what's wrong and radio hosts declaring him overpaid. Next thing you know, people will be begging for Jeremy Hermida back! Everyone needs to calm down. Crawford will be fine. But just to be safe, maybe move him down to ninth?

Dear Johns Crawford deserves some slack, but here are two guys who'll get none: John Lackey and Jonathan Papelbon. The Lackey beef comes from his lack of production, but also his refusal to shoulder any blame. As for Paps? It's just been a long time coming for the former untouchable dancing queen. Obviously it's too early to lose faith in either player, but it won't take much for fans to give them the B.K. Kim treatment.

Sellouts! Have you noticed the new promos during the Sox broadcasts? "Plenty of good seats available at Fenway!" That's a little weird. Maybe it'll take the end of Celtics and Bruins season for the Sox obsession to return. Maybe it'll just take some warm weather. Either way, there was a time when all it took was the return of baseball. They're going to have to get creative to keep that bogus sellout streak going.

No, They're Not Saying "Dreeeew." They're Booing I would've put JD Drew on that list with Lackey and Papelbon, but it's hard to disappoint when there aren't any expectations. At this point, Drew's just an everyday right fielder, raking in slightly less than Jon Lester, Clay Buchholz, Dustin Pedroia and Jacoby Ellsbury combined. All together now: "One. More. Year!"

Hot Papi Coming into 2011, the Sox were counting on David Ortiz less than they had at any point since the start of the 2003 season. With the pressure off, Papi responded with more homers in the first two games than he hit all of last April. Can he keep it up? Sure, in which case Big Papi will demand a big paycheck.

1 ONE SHINING CEREMONY

Don't get me wrong: Kemba Walker deserves his number retired at UConn. He led the Huskies on one of the most impressive late-season runs in recent history. But unveiling his jersey one day after the tourney? Come on, that's premature inauguration.

2 PLAYOFF PREDICTIONS

B's Still One Step Away Expectations are weird with this team. On one hand, you want to have that Cup or bust mentality—otherwise what's the point? On the other, you can't forget that this franchise hasn't made it past the second round since 1992. Can they really make the leap this season? I'll put them in the Conference Finals, and schedule a hot date with Stanley for next year.

C's Still a Wild Card I think they'll escape the East and probably lose to the Lakers again, but honestly, who the hell knows? Would I be shocked if they lost in the second round? Nope. Would I be shocked they won it all? Nope. Did we just become best friends?! Yup.

3 Boston Marathon Tips

For Runners If you're in the home stretch and a homeless man jogs out onto Boylston and challenges you to a one-armed push-up contest, do NOT accept. He's actually really good at one-arm push-ups. Plus, you just ran 25 miles! Come on. Common sense, here.

For Spectators I say this every year but can't stress it enough: Don't get drunk on booze and inspiration and declare to everyone within screaming distance that YOU'RE running NEXT year! Get over tomorrow's hangover first. Or just save yourself the pain of all that training and follow this next tip.

For Attention Seekers Stay in bed until 11 am, shower and enjoy a leisurely brunch. At around 2:30 pm, throw on a pair of short-shorts, wrap yourself in foil and make your way over to the finish. Now sit back, and let the world treat you like the winners you are!

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/13: It's the start of the Stanley Cup Playoffs, or as they call it in Canada: "The start of the Stanley Cup Playoffs." (What? They can call it that, too.)

4/16: How does Bill Belichick celebrate his 59th birthday? Draft boards, game film, probably A LOT of Diet Coke. All while wearing a tiny party hat.

4/17: The Celtics kick off the NBA playoffs at the Garden, where you can count on Shaq to be listed as "any day now."

4/18: It's Boston Marathon time, and for a record 115th consecutive year, I won't be running. However, I do have some helpful tips for all those involved.

"It always comes back to my hometown."

Soroff On LYNN HOFFMAN

The TV host talks about dinner with Gene Simmons, Debbie Harry's outfit and ultimate "gets."

COVER GIRL AND NEWTON NATIVE LYNN HOFFMAN received a degree in communications from the New England Institute of Art. She cohosted the Lander in the Morning show on Mix 98.5 before relocating to New York to be the first VJ for VH1 Classic, where she hosted its top-rated show, The All Request Hour, and then Hanging With. She has appeared on E! and TLC, has had her own morning show on New York's 102.7 and does extensive voice-over and narration. Since 2007, she has hosted the Emmy-nominated Private Sessions on A&E, with guests like Ringo Starr, Gregg Allman, Mary J. Blige, Annie Lennox and Ricky Martin. She recently founded Lynn Hoffman Entertainment. She lives in New York City.

Jonathan Soroff: Private Sessions sounds dirty.
Lynn Hoffman: I know. Sounds like something that would be under the adult section on late-night Cinemax. [Laughs.] Seriously? I wish it was more salacious and dirty.

Who's your ultimate Private Session?
It always comes back to my hometown: Aerosmith.

Why haven't they done it yet?
When I was on Lander in the Morning, I'd say it every day. I was like Rosie O'Donnell with Tom Cruise. But it still hasn't happened.

Name an artist who intimidated you.
Debbie Harry. I can't think of a bigger female icon. Someone came to tell me she wanted to know what I was wearing, so she'd know how to coordinate her outfit. I told them, and she said, "No, no. You can come show her what you're wearing." I was so nervous, I think I broke out in hives.

Anyone you'd never want to interview again?
Ricky Martin, because he's just so goddamn handsome, and he'll never be mine. [Laughs.] Seriously, I had a hard time containing myself and being professional around him.

When you have a Private Session with a boy band, it sounds even dirtier.
The Backstreet Boys taught me some of their signature moves. [Laughs.]

Your hair is reaching Rapunzel proportions. Ever tried lifting heavy objects with it?
It's getting long, but no I haven't. Occasionally, though, I've been known to whip people in the face with it.

What should the City of Newton name after you?
The parking lot in front of the Dunkin' Donuts on Needham Street should be named Lynn Hoffman Square because it was one of my first jobs ever, and I've been addicted ever since.

Anyone come on set noticeably on drugs?
Meat Loaf, but it was because he couldn't sleep so he'd taken an Ambien, and he said, "I don't think it's worn off yet."

Top three artists in heavy rotation on your iPod?
Michael Nappi, Katy Perry and Aerosmith.

How hard do the record labels or management companies try to get their acts on your show?
Hard, and it's a miracle that we're able to book anyone on our show at any time. It has to be kismet. For the artist to be in town, the band to be in town, the affordability, how much they're doing on the press tour while they're in New York…

Biggest "get"?
Probably Bon Jovi. That's the biggest thing that ever came through the halls at that studio. A&E has plenty of security, and they had all of them come up to the seventh floor, and still everyone who worked on all 14 floors of the building suddenly had a reason to be on our floor. Ringo Starr, too. Brooks and Dunn. Ricky Martin. Alan Jackson: 100,000,000-plus-albums-sold artists.

You've always made a living with your voice. What would you do if you suddenly couldn't speak?
Thank my lucky stars that I got insurance on my voice and start learning sign language.

Is Carson Daly ever going to go away?
I wish I'd known that his show The Voice was in production, because I would've loved to have had something to do with it. It's a great concept. And he has amazing longevity in this business. Good for him.

How would you do on American Idol*?*
I'd say that within moments of me starting to sing, a large pack of dogs would show up in the theater and start howling.

Ever booked a band for your show where you were like, "Ugh. I hate them."
No, but we've booked bands that I wasn't familiar with. For instance, I wasn't a big country fan at all, and now I am.

Six artists you'd want at a dinner party?
Steven Tyler, Lionel Richie, Mary J. Blige, Daryl Hall and John Oates, Madonna and Bono.

That's seven but I'll let it slide. How often have guests come on to you?
I think once. Gene Simmons decided he'd do the show, but he wasn't going to perform, so we did a whole hour on him. And then he just didn't leave, for like three hours. We ended up going out to dinner.

Did dinner end with a Kiss?
[Laughs.] No.

Justin Bieber or Zac Efron?
Those are my choices?!?

Of the artists you've interviewed, whose poster did you have on your wall as a teenager?
Oh, God. That has happened. Duran Duran.

Who did you want to be when you were a teenager?
A cross between Carol Burnett and Cher.

Favorite rapper?
Run DMC. I'm showing my age here, aren't I?

Is your demographic as middle-aged as me?
No, I'd say it ranges from 25 to 60.

Will you take me out to dinner on A&E's tab?
No, I'll do it on Lynn Hoffman Entertainment's tab. ✖✖✖

FRANK MCCLELLAND

Chef/owner of L'Espalier and Sel de la Terre

MCCLELLAND LIVES with his wife and young children (the older ones also come and go) on a 17th-century farm in Essex. The kitchen layout includes a large central island made of black soapstone and room to stage a 60-person farm dinner.

NIFTY STUFF → An original 1638 hearth, for hanging soups or slow roasting a chicken wrapped in onions and bacon → A wood-fired oven, for baked goods and pizzas → A spit-roaster → A rotisserie → Barns and coops to house livestock and chickens, ducks, turkeys and pheasants → Industrial-sized cookware, like a pot for boiling maple syrup → A collection of oyster trays (a favorite food) → Vintage cookware from McClelland's great-grandmother, a woman who left the U.S. in the 1890s to become a celebrated chef and caterer in Berlin. → A six-burner stove with a griddle that heats up to 500 degrees.

IN HIS FRIDGE: Jars of sauce made from heirloom tomatoes grown on the farm, fresh fruit and vegetables (as well as canned/pickled or otherwise preserved produce from the farm), chicken and duck eggs, coconut milk, chia and hemp seeds. Assorted cheeses.

DISH MOST FREQUENTLY COOKED: Whatever's around. Nothing goes to waste, and with a backyard full of fresh ingredients, the variety's nearly endless.

CHEFS MIGHT WORK IN A WONDERLAND OF COOL GADGETS, efficient layouts and unlimited counter space, but the amenities in their houses are often bare bones. Or, as Christopher Myers says of the loft he shares with his chef/partner/wife Joanne Chang, "Our kitchen sucks. We've got nothing. A cute Illy espresso maker. Big whoop. Beyond that, we don't even have a gas range or microwave." Which isn't that surprising. For someone who runs multiple restaurant kitchens, cooking at home could be a busman's holiday.

But there are chefs whose home kitchens are as tricked out as those in their restaurants. They've incorporated their professional passion into their personal spaces.

IN HER FRIDGE: Three types of bacon, homemade tomato sauce, a jar of Ragú, eggs, wheat bread, pea tendrils, dried cranberries, Frappuccinos, juice boxes, Howard's sweet pepper relish, root beer, vanilla yogurt, beer, wine, buttermilk and lots of Kerrygold butter (a Shire trademark). Assorted cheeses.

THE MAGPIE

LYDIA SHIRE

Chef/owner of Scampo, chef/culinary director Towne Stove and Spirits

ONLY A THIRD OF THE KITCHEN IN HER western suburban home is used for food preparation; the rest is for relaxing and entertaining. Distinctive characteristics include a concrete counter inlaid with coffee and glass beans and a glass pantry that houses Shire's vast collection of serving pieces and food-related paraphernalia, ranging from farm implements to vintage toys.

NIFTY STUFF → 1930s and '40s martini shakers, one shaped like a barbell → A mid-century Dixie cup dispenser → Children's tea sets and kitchens → A vintage orange-juice squeezer and a countertop device for making cube steak ("I feel like a caretaker," Shire says, "preserving these artifacts, which are little bits of cooking history.") → A stunning collection of Murano glass → Horn caviar spoons → Antique candy boxes from Germany and France → A complete set of Bjorn Winblad Christmas plates → A voodoo-doll toothpick holder → An art deco teapot shaped like a bellboy → A 1942 Chambers stove → Two dishwashers → A Gaggenau oven → A Traulsen refrigerator → A built-in garbage bin that holds 30-gallon trash bags.

DISH MOST FREQUENTLY COOKED: Skirt steak or the rice her husband, Uriel, makes.

DISH MOST FREQUENTLY COOKED: Gnocchi or chili with quinoa.

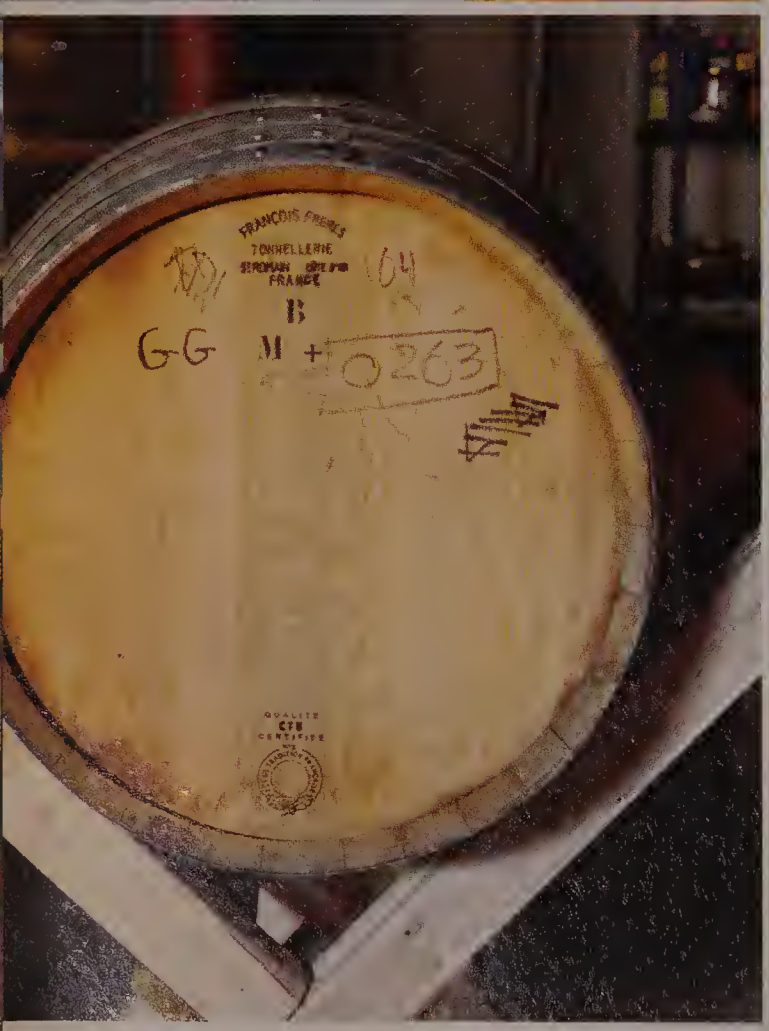
KEN ORINGER

Chef/owner of Clio, Uni, Toro, La Verdad, Coppa, KO Prime

ORINGER AND HIS WIFE, Celine, live in a South End penthouse with their daughter, Verveine (and another on the way), so space is at a premium.

IN HIS FRIDGE: West Indies hot sauce, Thai tamarind concentrate, Provence chutney, Korean kimchi base, Cuban cigars, maple syrup made by a friend in Vermont, rose petal jam, vintage sardines (2007), almond butter, sauerkraut, blue eggs from Misty Meadows Organic Farm in Maine. Assorted cheeses.

WHAT'S MISSING: His cookbooks. He has 1,000 in storage and only 750 or so at his home and office.



NIFTY STUFF → An immersion circulator, which looks like a fancy thermometer and allows him to cook food (sealed in a bag) over a long period of time in a low-temperature water bath → A vegetable juicer that crushes fruits and vegetables slowly, so that nutrient-destroying heat isn't created → A Viking wine fridge that holds a bottle of Vin de Paille that Oringer says, "I'll probably drink the night before I die." → Twin spice racks of Oringer's design flanking the stove → An industrial spice grinder → Enough knives to butcher a herd → A tortilla press → A shark-fin grater for wasabi → A gas-fueled grill on the roof deck (no annoying canisters) → Custom-built liquor cabinets that hold an exotic array of spirits from around the world (gentian, absinthe, assorted aquavits and, of course, a bottle of Verveine) → A collection of vintage shakers and barware.

BROOKE VOSIKA

Executive chef at the Four Seasons Hotel, Boston

DISH MOST FREQUENTLY COOKED: Whatever he's in the mood for. He lives alone.

IN HIS FRIDGE: Fish sauce, chilis, Sriracha, Stubb's Bar-B-Q sauce, a porterhouse steak, curry paste, pho, Colman's wholegrain mustard, Pommery mustard, organic local eggs, hand-ground peanut butter, quince paste, KeVita coconut probiotic drink, capers, a bottle of Dom Pérignon, almond milk, handcrafted maple syrup, a jar of Italian tuna in olive oil. Assorted cheeses.

THE MOST NOTICEABLE thing about the living area of Vosika's south suburban home is the art. Aside from a collection of high-end Staub pots, rare olive oils and homemade herb-infused vinegars, nothing in the kitchen screams Top Chef. The basement, which he calls "the lab," is another story. That's where he makes wine and cider, and cures meats.

NIFTY STUFF → Relish, chutney, pickles and preserves from the fruits and vegetables he grows at his farm in upstate New York → 15-, 20- and 30-gallon French oak barrels → Glass carboys and demijohns for primary fermentation → Wooden casks for red wine → Glass casks for white wine → A corker and siphons → Sulfites (the only chemicals he uses in his wine, and only to arrest the aging process of the whites) → Hanging from the rafters: lamb prosciutto, Smithfield-style hams made with Berkshire-bred pork and soppressata → Rare, first-edition cookbooks and an extensive collection of Gastronomica magazine.

THE JAMES BOND

BARBARA LYNCH

Chef/owner of No. 9 Park, Sportello, the Butcher Shop, B&G Oysters, Drink and Menton

THIS BUSY MOM didn't see the logic in a standard residential kitchen, so she had a restaurant-quality kitchen installed in her house, designed by celebrated duo Cheryl and Jeffrey Katz. It spans the length of the house and includes a 12-foot stainless-steel island.

NIFTY STUFF → An induction stove (which heats only when in contact with something magnetic, so all the cookware is either cast iron or steel) → A custom-designed ventilation hood → A red-wine refrigerator → A white-wine refrigerator → A professional-caliber Combi oven, costing roughly as much as an E-Class Mercedes-Benz → A Viking oven (which Lynch refers to as "the one my husband uses") → Two dishwashers → A pasta station, which looks like a fast-food fry-o-lator and has its own freezer drawers → A marble counter for working dough (and racks from which to hang pasta) → A wall with roughly 200 cookbooks (with another 800+ in her collection) → An ice machine → Custom storage units for grains and flour.

DISH MOST FREQUENTLY COOKED:
Roast chicken or seafood stew.

IN HER FRIDGE: Hand-ground peanut butter and sushi from Whole Foods, Orb Weaver Farm goat's milk cheese, a bottle of chablis, MaraNatha dark-chocolate almond spread, black olive paste. Assorted cheeses.

GUT INSTINCT

RENOVATING A BATHROOM IS EASY WHEN YOU HIRE A CONTRACTOR. DOING IT YOURSELF IS DECIDEDLY NOT.

IMAGINE YOUR DREAM BATHROOM. Perhaps it's as vast as a Roman bathhouse, or maybe it's Cape Cod rustic. Or it could be modern and sleek. We'd probably disagree, you and I, on what constitutes the ultimate bathroom. But I'm sure we'd agree on the definition of a mediocre one: grubby vinyl floor, disintegrating fiberboard vanity, a light fixture that belongs in Wayne Newton's dressing room. The sink would definitely have an integral soap dish molded in the likeness of a seashell (classy!). The trim around the floor would be that adhesive brown plastic stuff you'd expect to see in a fifth-grade classroom or the RMV. Do you have a mental picture yet? I do. Because I just described the upstairs bathroom in my house.

OUR DOWNSTAIRS BATHROOM is fine—tile and granite, as required by the strictures of home renovation protocol circa 2002–2011. The upstairs bathroom, though, is astounding in its decrepitude. I ask a contractor for an estimate on a total overhaul—a tile floor, new fixtures, new tub and new paint—and the estimate, all things considered, is pretty reasonable. But it's still $7,000. While ugly, my bathroom is not seven-grand-ugly. So I ignore the neglected room a while longer, but every time I walk past, it taunts me with its incongruent shoddiness. "Hey loser," says my bathroom. "Why don't you renovate me yourself? It's not that hard. Idiots on HGTV do this kind of thing all the time. Or are you not man enough for the job?" This bathroom is a real jerk.

One day in early spring I've had enough. I decide that the only way to learn how to renovate a bathroom is to renovate a bathroom. And I'm handy, sort of. I have Internet how-to videos and a book about do-it-yourself home projects. What's the worst that could happen? If it all goes completely off the rails, then I admit defeat and call in the pros. That's what I tell myself as I sink my DeWalt reciprocating power saw into the vanity. As the blade spits cheap fiberboard onto the cheap vinyl floor, I feel the flush of fear that comes when you realize there's no turning back.

There's hardly any need to hack up the vanity. I could unscrew it from the wall, unhook the water lines and wrestle it free. But I need to lift the sink to extract the drain pipe from the lower half of the plumbing. And that procedure is roughly one percent easier if I saw things up with a nice, cathartic power tool.

I'm five minutes into my remodeling when I nearly make a catastrophic mistake. Suppose that a stubborn vanity, in one last act of defiance, grips the power saw blade and momentarily stops it. With the blade stationary, the saw kicks my arm back. Just behind me are glass shower doors, precisely in reach of a flailing elbow. Somehow, I merely knock the door off the rail without breaking it, but there's no doubt I just came perilously close to a trip to the ER with a shredded limb.

The rest of the demolition works better, and the bedroom adjacent to the bathroom becomes a junkyard. Out comes the sink and vanity. The floor gets diced into strips with a utility knife. I'm keeping the bathtub, since that's actually not too offensive, but now my bathroom is nearly a blank slate.

My wife, Heather, comes home from work to find the toilet sitting in the hallway. I regale her with tales of its wax sealing ring, which I pried off with steely determination and a small measure of dry-heaving. She is impressed, I think. I'm not sure whether I told her I'd decided to demolish our bathroom. Um, surprise, honey?

I'm proud of my handiwork thus far, but my confidence remains shaky. After all, anyone with a bad temper can destroy a room, but rebuilding one requires skill. And tools. I head to Lowe's on the first of what will become many, many visits.

My first stop is the flooring aisle. A helpful fellow asks me what I need, and I cheerfully list off tiles, cement and grout. And, I allow, I'll need a trowel. And a grout float. And a grout sponge. And a couple of buckets. "What size spacers do you need?" he asks. I reply that I'll need some of the appropriate size, and what are spacers? A contractor standing nearby casts me a skeptical glance and asks, "What are you using to cut the tiles? You have a wet saw?" The Lowe's guy agrees that I should probably have a wet saw. My shopping list is growing unexpectedly long.

The wet saw is $90, but I tell myself that this will be a good thing to own. I mean, how many times have I been working on a project and said to myself, "Man, I could really use a wet saw right now"? Well, never. But that's gonna change, now that I have the means to quickly and accurately cut ceramic objects. This is the beginning of a glorious future.

Back home with my materials, I surf YouTube to watch people tiling floors. The prevailing message in these videos is, "Tiling floors is basically quite simple, but there are a bunch of ways that you'll probably cut your fingers off. Have fun!"

I decide to lay down the new floor underneath everything else—instead of tiling around the toilet and new vanity, I'll just tile the whole room and plop things down on top when I'm done. On one hand, I'm wasting tiles on places nobody will ever see (like under the vanity), but this decision doubtlessly saves countless hours worth of measuring and cutting. And, as I will soon discover, the wet saw is not my friend.

My second good decision is to lay the tile out on the floor without cement, to see how it fits. You don't want to just start in a corner and radiate out, because you'll probably end up with weird slivers of tile on the opposite side. You center the tiles on the dry floor, then you go drink a beer because you spent so much time at Lowe's that it's now nighttime and far too late to begin tiling a bathroom. Once you mix that cement, you're a tilin' fool until that floor is done, and I want to enjoy my current sense of self-satisfaction before poisoning it with a grout-related disaster.

The next day, I dump half of a 25-pound bag of cement into a bucket, add water and get to work. If you think your bathroom's too small, try cementing individual six-inch tiles across the entire floor. I promise you'll soon feel like you're tiling St. Peter's Square. Each piece has a bar code that must be removed. Then you smear cement on the floor and on the tile, set the piece and arrange plastic spacers so it's neither crooked, too high nor too low. When you get near the edges, you need to measure and visit the wet saw, where you cut the tiles to the appropriate size while mists of dirty water and debris spray everywhere. At one point, I'm setting a tile when I hear the wet saw start running in the next room. By itself. From now on, I unplug Demon Saw whenever my back is turned.

Repeat the procedure—bar code, cement, spacers, cutting as needed—140 times, because there are 141 tiles in the bathroom. This means you'll get down on your hands and knees at least 140 times. And we haven't even talked about the grout yet. That $7,000 estimate is starting to sound like a major bargain.

I wait another day before messing with grout. Grouting, while mind-numbing, at least offers the benefit of closure. Ten pounds of grout and countless sponge-rinsings later, my floor is rendered in Italian San Marino tile with antique-white grout, and I completely understand why they went with linoleum last time. But everything looks straight, so it's on to fixtures.

The first thing I do is reinstall the toilet. I remove the rag I stuffed in the floor's toilet pipe, wrestle the throne into place atop its new wax ring and bolt it into place. Everything looks good. Everything except the water shutoff valve, which apparently self-destructed when I turned it off to remove the toilet in the first place. Back to Lowe's. The valve they sell me is a larger diameter than the pipe at my house, and despite including a threaded adapter, it leaks, the water disappearing down the side of the pipe and into some unseen part of the house. Back to Lowe's.

I ultimately return with both a functional valve and a nifty flange around the pipe to cover the hole in the floor. (I bought a circular diamond-coated drill bit to cut a hole in the tile around the pipe, but could never get it to do more than grind away fruitlessly at the tile while heating itself to approximately 2,000 degrees. Apparently, my tiles are harder than diamonds.)

Next it's back to the store to pick up paint and a new vanity, medicine cabinet and lights. I'm temporarily confounded by the selection of light fixtures—they're Wayne Newton Specials, every one of them—until I realize that I need to look in the electrical section instead of the bathroom section. Problem solved. The vanity doesn't come with a faucet, so I grab one of those, too.

I paint the room in about an hour, the whole time thanking the chemists at Valspar for developing one-coat paint. As a former housepainter, I'm well acquainted with the Sisyphean feeling of futility that comes when you finish painting a room, only to start right back on the other side for a second coat. Primer and finish all in one bucket—in my opinion, it's right up there with electricity and the invention of the phrase "bunga-bunga party" in the annals of human achievement.

MY WIFE COMES HOME TO FIND THE TOILET IN THE HALL.

The new medicine cabinet goes up quickly. The new light fixture does too, after I make about 20 trips from the third floor down to the basement to figure out which switch on the circuit breaker cuts power to the bathroom. The vanity looks like a straight bolt-in, too, until I make a disheartening discovery: no matter how I position the sink atop the vanity, the drain won't quite line up with the pipes below. It's just a fraction of an inch off, but it's off. So I call a plumber to move the pipe.

At least, that's what I should've done. Instead, I muscle the pipes together and screw everything into place (after a couple more trips to Lowe's for the proper adapters). Then I seal it all up with caulking and prayer. While the sealant is drying, I turn my attention to the trim boards I bought for the floor.

This part, I figure, will be easy: Measure the sections, cut the board, nail it into place, paint it. The only problem is, I don't have a power saw. I can sort of cut straight sections with a hand saw, but the corners will require beveled edges—each piece getting a mirrored 45-degree angle to fit snugly together. I realize forlornly that I need to buy another tool.

About $110 later, I have a Hitachi miter saw to complement my Skil wet saw. A miter saw is a terrifying instrument that can cut at an angle. The first time I bring the blade down on a piece of trim, I'm afraid it will somehow kick back and sink itself into my femoral artery. If I could operate it by remote control from another room, I would. But it cuts cleanly and, with a little trial and error, my bedroom is successfully coated in sawdust and useless wood scraps. After much more error, I have a few usable pieces of trim. They're not a perfect fit, but that's what caulk and paint is for. My painting skills will make up for my miter-saw deficiencies.

After nailing in the trim, painting it semi-gloss white and putting up a new shower curtain, I've got myself a renovated bathroom. I'm mildly amazed that I was capable of executing this kind of project armed only with a book and Internet how-to videos. I can't walk past without pausing in the doorway to admire the neat lines of tile and the crisp fit of the trim around the vanity. I probably saved myself about $4,000. And, in my own grout-addled opinion, my handiwork looks like a pro job.

Almost. The sink leaks because the pipes aren't quite square. I should call a plumber. But I think I can fix this. Who knows? I might even be right. ×××

DOUBLE FISTING

SOCIAL MEDIA DARLING Second Glass pops the cork on the third annual Boston Wine Riot, a quirky celebration of all things vino. Instead of white jackets and tastevins, rioters can adorn themselves at a fake tattoo parlor, or take snapshots at old-school photo-booths to document the effects of 250 different tasting options. Besides crash courses in the basics, there's a "wine intelligence unit" to answer the most obscure, or obvious, inquiries. And, in keeping with the times, you can download a mobile app to remember your favorite bottles—it's the ultimate designated Riot driver. Toast the democratization of the grape April 22–23 at the Park Plaza Castle.

The Adjustment Bureau ★★ Based on a short story by Philip K. Dick, whose brain-twisting existential malaise has already influenced films like Blade Runner and Minority Report, The Adjustment Bureau stars Matt Damon as David Norris, a cocky young politician. In the men's room rehearsing his concession speech, he meets a blowsy party-crasher played by Emily Blunt, kicking off a delightful back-and-forth of screwball banter. These crazy kids belong together, but the science-fiction plot says otherwise. Enter the Adjustment Bureau, a collection of awesome character actors in fedoras bumping into people and causing so-called coincidences. Answering to somebody who's supposed to maybe be God, they work like trenchcoat-clad angels, taking orders from memos delivered in faded manila envelopes. Their superpowers are arbitrary and depend on the whims of the plot, which is all just an excuse for more classically Dick-ish debates on predetermination versus free will. Apparently magic fedoras allow access through secret doorways that teleport you across entire city blocks. But you know who's really good in this movie? Matt Damon. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Black Swan ★★★★ Flirting with ridiculousness on its way to the sublime, Black Swan is either the greatest stupid movie I've seen all year, or the stupidest great movie. Such petty distinctions hardly matter when you're caught up in its headlong rush. Natalie Portman stars as a stunted porcelain ballerina living in a cramped apartment with her stage mommy (Barbara Hershey), until she gets the role of a lifetime playing both the virginal white swan and her slatternly black counterpart in her company's latest production. Down the rabbit hole we go, getting a first-person view of her escalating mania, thanks to director Darren Aronofsky's dizzying technique. Keeping the camera claustrophobically close to his heroine, he cuts and jumps while cranking up the Grand-Guignol music cues. Walls of mirrors hammer home the doppelgänger themes. Shot on 16mm by the brilliant Matthew Libatique, the film's palette retreats into high-contrast blacks, whites and blood-reds as we descend into chaos. (At Stuart Street Playhouse and in the suburbs.)

Cedar Rapids ★★ ½ A stunted man-child's journey (The Office's Ed Helms) from a small town to a medium-sized city for an insurance convention begins by mining lame hick humor, like Helms' gobsmacked awe at economy-motel accommodations. But director Miguel Arteta's latest feature gets better as it goes along, thanks mostly to the contributions of a stellar supporting cast. Helms' good-natured rube slowly brings out the best in his sad-sack colleagues, who swarm to the annual industry gathering as an excuse to drink heavily in soul-deadening chain restaurants and party hard as a vacation from their miserable lives and collapsed dreams. An unrecognizable Anne Heche costars as a disarmingly matter-of-fact adulteress, but the movie belongs to John C. Reilly as a bloated backslapper who laughs way too loud at his own vulgar jokes. Reilly is an Arthur Miller character for the Apatow era. Too bad Cedar Rapids slinks away from his despair in favor of a formulaic happy ending. His performance deserved a braver movie. (In the suburbs.)

Hall Pass ★ ½ The Farrelly Brothers' decade-long wallow in irrelevance continues with this sad spectacle, which stars Owen Wilson and Jason Sudeikis as a couple of dorky suburbanites granted a week's vacation from the vows of marriage by their exasperated better halves. The problem that has plagued every Farrelly movie since their twin triumphs—Kingpin and There's Something About Mary—is that the copious gross-outs feel obligatory. The brothers have been self-consciously trying to outdo the hair-gel joke since 1998, getting bigger and ruder while simultaneously neglecting the construction that made those set-pieces the stuff of legend. Shot like a sitcom, with unconvincing Georgia locations standing in for Rhode Island and the Cape, this garishly overlit film lacks any semblance of real human behavior. Outlandish flights of profanity reek of flopsweat, as if the brothers know they've been eclipsed by Judd Apatow but assume that by throwing enough pee-pee and poo-poo at the screen they might catch up. What use is spraying diarrhea all over a wall if you don't follow it up with a punch line? (In the suburbs.)

Hanna ★★ ½ Director Joe Wright's bombastic junk-food thriller stars Atonement's Saoirse Ronan as a genetically engineered super-soldier trained in the wilderness by her rogue-agent father (Eric Bana) to hunt and kill in sync with the Chemical Brothers' throbbing electronic soundtrack. Cate Blanchett wins the Melissa Leo award for most egregious overacting as the

Binoche and Shimell are baffling and poignant.

Certified Copy ★★★★
Starring Juliette Binoche and William Shimell. Written and directed by Abbas Kiarostami. In French, English and Italian with English subtitles. At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.

THEY ARE STRANGERS AT first.

He's a writer touring Tuscany to support his latest, an arcane hardcover insisting there's no difference between a genuine work of art and its many knockoffs. A postcard of the "Mona Lisa" is still a "Mona Lisa," so eventually all roads lead back to the original. He attempts to expound on this pedantic (but credible) philosophy, while She awkwardly shuffles to the front of the auditorium and makes a big show out of not listening.

She's a hot mess, flighty and transplanted from somewhere in France. Played by Juliette Binoche in one of her most fearless performances, this jangling bundle of nerves—billed as "Elle," which is just "She" in another language—upstages his reading, and drags him out afterward for an afternoon of relentless conversation. She's an antiques dealer, so his theory of inauthenticity clearly gets her blood boiling.

He is played by William Shimell, an opera singer making his film debut. The two eventually take a drive, waxing and waning at great length about life and all its imponderables. So for a little while, Certified Copy feels like its own certified copy of Before Sunrise, or any European art-house picture in which mismatched characters wander around exotic locales, pontificating with regard to their disparate worldviews.

And then something happens.

A barista mistakes them for a married couple. She decides to play along. So does He. Suddenly, with no warning to the audience, they're a married couple, airing grievances and bitter, long-buried resentments. The friendly squabbling eventually becomes an epic argument, leaving you to scratch your head and wonder what's real and what's role-playing.

An easy way to explain this picture would be to believe that She is simply test-driving his bookish theories, fashioning a double of her own husband and taking out her long-buried aggressions on a certified copy. But writer/director Abbas Kiarostami allows no easy outs. Information is consistently conveyed in such a way that directly contradicts everything you've seen before. From moment to moment, the film is elusive—roles and perspectives change.

> As time passes and people age, are you presenting a false self to those you claim to love?

There's an extremely dull thread of movie criticism I've observed when talking to folks about films like Black Swan and Inception: People seem to be angling for a linear, baseline explanation to what's actually happening during a film. They're so eager to pin down what's "real" and what's not. Does that even matter? Certified Copy argues that it doesn't.

There's a reason that Luis Buñuel's cowriter Jean-Claude Carrière shows up for a cameo in this picture. Despite the Euro-pudding trappings, Kiarostami is obviously aiming for an old-school mindbender like The Discreet Charm of the Bourgeoisie, in which actors shuffle roles and trade places, ditching realism and shoving thematic concerns to the forefront.

Certified Copy jolts you into considering deeper, darker questions. As time passes and people age, are you presenting a false self to those you claim to love? Maybe the entire idea of marriage is just another way of preserving a replica of the person you were at the time you got hitched… a certified copy, perhaps? What if you grew up and your spouse didn't?

A long, wordless shot of Binoche putting on makeup in a mirror illustrates Kiarostami's mysterious concerns. What matters more than the face you put on at any given moment? The ramifications of this sequence are cosmic and harrowing. Certified Copy quietly trips you up in a hall of mirrors, ping-ponging along in an unassuming guise.

Kiarostami is a titan of Iranian cinema, but for the past decade or so has bandied about with experimental pictures and weird documentaries. This is his first European film, and he mimics the conventions of the genre admirably, fostering untold secrets with his careful use of offscreen space.

It's such a formally controlled, hermetically sealed picture—but the pauses and the business happening just outside the frame suggest a larger world, where everything is unsteady and open to hours of interpretation. Every time you think you have a handle on the damn thing, it just keeps wriggling away.

Certified Copy reminded me why I love movies. ✖✖✖ honey-accented C.I.A. honcho aching to neutralize the young Hanna. The results sometimes feel like a tweener Bourne movie and sometimes like an art-house Kick-Ass, minus the logic but with plenty more ostentatious camera acrobatics. Wright has always been a bit of a show-off in the director's chair, and he doesn't skimp on Hanna's goofy visual flourishes. The camera spins upside down and back again, often for no reason. It's violent, propulsive and sometimes very silly. The question of whether or not you're laughing with the film—or at it—looms large over the quasi-tragic final reel. (At Fenway, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Happythankyoumoreplease ★★ Languishing on the shelf since its Sundance premiere last year, How I Met Your Mother star Josh Radnor's debut feature is an instantly forgettable romantic comedy in the wannabe–Woody Allen mold. It's the kind of generic indie we see dozens of times each year, crosscutting between three couples with middling relationship problems and little at stake in an anachronistically affordable Manhattan. Radnor headlines as a struggling short-story writer, who predictably turns out to be just like every other boozy chick-magnet with commitment issues that actors-turned-filmmakers always pen for themselves to play. Competently photographed in widescreen, Happythankyoumoreplease is at best polished and pleasant, running familiar riffs on material that was already stale back when Edward Burns was rehashing it 15 years ago. Lacking a fresh sensibility or any hint of an edge, Radnor dutifully unfurls the indie-rock montage sequences, wrapping up all his storylines with predictable little bows and no acknowledgement of a world outside these beautiful people's solipsistic navel-gazing. (At the Embassy Cinema.)

Jane Eyre ★★ There have been at least 12 big-screen adaptations of Charlotte Brontë's 1847 novel, as well as another dozen or so made for TV. Is there anything more we can gain from yet another couple hours with Jane and Mr. Rochester? Director Cary Joji Fukunaga's take is respectful, for the most part adequate and, as far as I can see, has no compelling reason to exist. Fukunaga attempts to shake up the text with some rough-hewn naturalism, fixating on the Derbyshire landscapes and overplaying the miserable weather. The shots are handheld and often underexposed, announcing from the outset that this isn't your mom's Jane Eyre. Except it really is. Once you look past the shaky-cameras and ugly costumes, there's nothing new. Luckily, Michael Fassbender is there to liven things up as the moody Rochester. Wearing unfortunate, pubic-looking sideburns, this wry Irish actor plays up the character's lazy contempt for everyone in his company. But Mia Wasikowska's Jane just blandly stands around, suffering from Fukunaga's ugly natural lighting and deliberately drab color scheme. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Just Go With It ★ ½ Every time Adam Sandler bears his soul and takes a beating at the box office, as with Punch-Drunk Love or the more recent Funny People, he follows up with another five years of blockbuster slop from his Happy Madison crap factory, which grinds out indifferently acted, lowest-common-denominator comedies at a depressingly prolific pace. This latest affront stars Sandler as a caddish plastic surgeon who, for reasons too laborious to explain, forces his long-suffering assistant (Jennifer Aniston) to pretend to be his ex-wife during a trip to Hawaii with a bodacious babe (model Brookyn Decker). Undisciplined and punishingly overlong, the movie oozes misogyny, homophobia and an overall aura of lazy contempt. The lone bright spots are Aniston's barbed line readings, probably because she seems as annoyed by the plot and abrasive characters as we are. I daresay she's never been so human and relatable onscreen. Too bad the movie only decides she's worthwhile as a person after she puts on a bikini. (In the suburbs.)

The King's Speech ★★ ½ Rocky for stutterers, director Tom Hooper's film is a perfectly acceptable middlebrow diversion, the kind of British delight that hoovers up Oscars without leaving much of a lasting impression (see also: Shakespeare in Love). Colin Firth stars as stammering King George VI, who must warily assume the throne after some extramarital shenanigans by his brother throw the monarchy into crisis. Timid and tongue-tied, Firth seeks the counsel of Geoffrey Rush's oddball speech therapist, as this newfangled invention called the radio requires our leaders to be articulate. Slyly grafting an amusing anecdote onto a large historical canvas, The King's Speech feigns an importance it doesn't earn. The movie does, however, contain some nicely calibrated performances and droll asides. Too bad Hooper shoots it all with distracting fish-eye lenses and oversells the comedy before shoveling on the pathos. Still, it's harmless enough, for this kind of thing. (In the suburbs.)

Limitless ★★ ½ During any other era, Bradley Cooper's entitled frat-boy smarminess would've stranded him in villain roles. Lucky for him, we live in a post-Kardashian, "winning" America, so Cooper's cheerfully amoral swagger can carry the day in an odd duck like Limitless, wherein the hero's fundamental shallowness is all part of the fun. Playing a bedraggled novelist, Cooper's brazen opportunist happens upon an experimental drug that increases the subject's brainpower tenfold. Naturally, he parlays this superheroic ability into a career of Wall Street plundering and a lifestyle of Manhattan luxury. The strained thriller machinations wear thin over time—and I'm still not exactly sure how that murder plot exactly plays out—but director Neil Burger polishes this turd to a very fine sheen (no pun intended) that's visually intoxicating. Slick and as guiltily pleasurable as a reality show, Limitless has no interest in pondering consequences or ethics. It's an adrenaline rush, as charming and vacant as the movie's own front man. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Paul ★★ Simon Pegg and Nick Frost's Shaun of the Dead did a remarkable job inserting two goofball slackers into the margins of a zombie apocalypse. It was a tricky send-up that did everything right that their latest, Paul, does wrong. Now starring as a couple of sheltered fanboys looking for UFOs on their way home from Comic-Con, Pegg and Frost (who also cowrote the script) happen upon an actual alien—one that smokes a lot of weed and sounds suspiciously like Seth Rogen. The ensuing road trip is a rather deadening laundry list of nerdy pop-cultural references, mostly content to restage sequences from classic 1980s sci-fi films. Repeating famous catchphrases and posing in familiar settings, these boys have mistaken references for jokes. Director Greg Mottola, who most recently helmed the marvelous Adventureland, has little capacity for broad farce, with gifted comedic performers like Jason Bateman, Bill Hader and Kristen Wiig salvaging stray laughs despite the inconsistent tone. The barrage of in-jokes attempts to flatter the audience, but familiarity breeds contempt. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Source Code ★★★ A man (Jake Gyllenhaal) wakes up without his memory on a Chicago commuter train to find a hot fellow passenger (Michelle Monaghan) is being overtly friendly. There's also the unsettling reality that someone else's face is staring back at him in the bathroom mirror. Then the whole damn train explodes. Quickly plunged back to a frosty control bunker, video-linked to an even chillier commanding officer (Vera Farmiga), Gyllenhaal's shell-shocked war vet discovers that—thanks to the brain's capacity to retain information after death (plus a quantum physics equation to be named later)—a secret military forensic operation has allowed him to mind-meld with a civilian victim and witness a terrorist attack that took place hours before. What follows is Groundhog Day meets Speed, a star-crossed love story unfolding in eight-minute couplets. Paced like a rocket and unfolding perilously close to real time, Source Code creates a maze in which we want the hero to solve the mystery and save the girl from a tragedy that has already occurred. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sucker Punch ★ Already a box-office bomb of epic proportions, director Zack Snyder's creepy ode to scantily-clad female empowerment plays like the tumescent dream of a deeply stunted little boy. Emily Browning stars as Babydoll, a fiery kid condemned to an old-school insane asylum and scheduled for a lobotomy by her leering, abusive stepfather. As a coping mechanism, the relentlessly objectified starlet escapes into a fantasy world where she leads an uprising at a skanky bordello. I'm not sure why a molested child would seek escape from her conditions by imagining herself as a high-priced whore, but Snyder's film only gets weirder and more offensive from there. Every time these girls (including Abbie Cornish and Jena Malone) exhibit any sort of sexuality, Sucker Punch jumps to another meta-level of fantasy, where they fight dragons and robots during World War I. It's a dull series of protracted action sequences that feel like watching somebody else play a video game. Endless, sleazy and just plain wrong, this movie should only be seen by Snyder's therapist. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Unknown ★★★ Apparently Liam Neeson, the husky-voiced oak tree of an actor creeping up on his 60th birthday, has decided to become the next Jason Statham, knocking around a bunch of Eurotrash baddies in some slickly engineered B-pictures. This is not an unwelcome development. Like Neeson's surprise 2008 smash Taken, Unknown is shrewdly crafted Friday-night entertainment—the kind of movie that'll play forever on cable. As a botanist who suffers temporary amnesia after a car accident in Berlin, Neeson finds another man (amusingly played by his Michael Collins frenemy Aidan Quinn) stealing his identity. Conspiracies and righteous pummelings abound, as do the cardboard line readings of Mad Men's January Jones. A goofy timekiller well aware of its silliness, the film boasts fine widescreen location work and deliciously hammy turns from Bruno Ganz and Frank Langella. The movie knows exactly what it's doing, and does it well. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Win Win ★★★ Writer/director Thomas McCarthy, known for Sundance smashes like The Station Agent and The Visitor, doesn't have a lot of challenging ideas up his sleeve. As far as I can tell, he takes a gimmicky construct and casts it wisely, drawing out fresh performances from underused actors by playing to their strengths in endearing showcase roles. There really isn't anything wrong with the formula. McCarthy's latest stars Paul Giamatti as a schlubby high school coach who accidentally ends up being foster-father to a solemn wrestling prodigy with abandonment issues. Ethical knots abound, paying lip service to troubled times in recession-addled New Jersey, but Win Win truly takes flight whenever it becomes a true underdog sports movie—scoring big laughs from simple three-shots of Giamatti, Jeffrey Tambor and the never-not-funny Bobby Cannavale as beleaguered coaches of the worst wrestling team in the Garden State. McCarthy doesn't ever get a handle on his tale's courtroom histrionics, but the lovable characters and genre payoffs make it a pleasure nonetheless. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Flock of Seagulls

Pecking Order These days, most suspense films rely on cheap 3-D tricks to pack theaters, but there was a time when plot mattered more than plastic glasses. Alfred Hitchcock's The Birds is the archetype of such cinema. Its subtlety amps up the creep-factor in the ultimate it-could-happen-to-you scenario. On April 25, the Coolidge Corner Theatre screens Hitchcock's masterpiece as part of its Science on Screen series, followed by a discussion about real and hypothetical avian threats. Bird Flu II: Nothing's Over Easy.

GAINING GRAVITY

Atmosphere plays the House of Blues on April 23.

Dan Monick

OVER 15 YEARS, THE hip-hop outfit Atmosphere has evolved from two turntables and a microphone to textural guitar and piano, from lyrics of juvenile indiscretion to matured viewpoints, and from a Minneapolis dark horse to a grassroots juggernaut.

Through it all, the core duo of rapper Slug (Sean Daley) and DJ/producer Ant (Anthony Davis) have kept Atmosphere stripped down in sound and close to home in perspective.

"We came out in this underground genre of indie-rap at a time when a lot of our colleagues were piling everything and the kitchen sink into their productions," Daley says. Instead, they emulated '80s rapper KRS-One's stark Boogie Down Productions crew. "We came out really sparse and straight to the point for the most part."

In turn, Daley's rhymes echoed his own exploits, for better or worse. "I keep my music parallel to my life," he says. "There was a time when I was OK at writing songs about being a drunk,

I guess, bitter guy. And I can probably [still] write that song easy. But it would be kind of contrived, because I'm not really drunk anymore, and I'm not all that bitter anymore, either."

At 38, Daley finds himself in a different space. He's newly married with a one-year-old son (in addition to a son who's now 17), and Atmosphere just dropped the aptly titled album The Family Sign.

"We wanted to make a slower record, almost a quieter record, because no one really does that," Daley says from his home in Minneapolis, where the members of Atmosphere cofounded the hip-hop label Rhymesayers Entertainment in 1995. "None of us are raging at the party anymore. So we wanted something more reflective. I still think we put some edge in these songs without necessarily having to turn up the volume."

Ever-sparse, the album is shaded with work from the group's longtime touring guitarist Nate Collis and keyboardist Erick Anderson. Rap balladry even floats through tracks like "Something So," where Daley whispers melodically, "They tell me that I'm not qualified to lend my voice to something so beautiful."

Producer Davis' beats still anchor Anderson's fuzz-piano chords in "She's Enough," while "My Key" and "Bad Bad Daddy" weave dark, psychedelic menace in a Portishead vein.

In turn, a lyrical edge fuels "The Last to Say," a track about urging a woman to flee her abusive man. "What happened to you, you don't have a clue, did your mama used to suffer accidents, too?" Daley raps, and his line about "a childhood of watching Ma and Pa get raw" cuts deeper given his acknowledgement of domestic abuse, alcoholism and separation in his own family.

"Maybe I could've written that song 15 years ago, but I'm not necessarily secure that my understanding of it would've been what it is today," Daley says. "The song may have come off as more preachy or more angry."

Indeed, Atmosphere's early records are marked by the rapper's bullheaded attitude and hedonistic focus at the time. Signifying lyrical as well as personal change, Daley says he regrets "gross" sexual lyrics on older tracks like "My Songs," noting that you'd never hear that from his idol, Tom Waits, who contributed a beatboxing part to Atmosphere's 2008 outing When Life Gives You Lemons, You Paint That Shit Gold.

"I have some more work to do to balance out some of the bullshit I've contributed to the art form," says Daley, whose group hits Boston's sold-out House of Blues on April 23. "I don't necessarily separate myself [from my older material]. I had to go through that stuff to get where I am now."

He reached a turning point several years ago after hitting bottom with his dependency on alcohol and painkillers and developing the hair-loss condition alopecia.

"That was a period when I took stock and did a lot of reassessing," Daley says, noting that the period also includes his marriage and the birth of his second son. "It's all a series of moments that hopefully all point you in a particular direction to show you what you should be doing with your life." ✖✖✖

Go! Funk Yourself

Cheeky Spice Take a musical trip through the decades with indie-rock group the Go! Team. The sextet from Brighton, England, offers amped-up pop on its new album, Rolling Blackouts. Mod '60s girl-band riffs echo behind cheeky '80s punk lyrics, while '90s grunge-rock rhythms play off old-school hip-hop and rap beats. The Go! Team adds schoolyard chants, bubblegum pop and Bollywood sounds to a swirl of high-energy electro euphoria, and cuts it with a sexy edge from lead vocalist and female rapper Ninja. See the show at Paradise Rock Club on April 15. Hilary White

Apocalypse Wow!

Impure Thoughts Contained, an exhibit appearing through April 24 at the Mills Gallery at Boston Center for the Arts, features work from 10 artists commenting on industrial waste. Whether it's Alex Lukas' comic book–like drawings of ruined city landscapes or Mark Franchino's series of garbage-can photographs, these visions remind you that pestilent byproducts don't go away when you roll up your car window. Sure, the images range from gloomy commentaries on our species' doomed existence to dark mockeries of the overdeveloped world. But art is meant to be unsettling.

WE'LL HAVE NUN OF THAT

OK, But What Kind of Thermometer?

So what, exactly, does the South End taste like? Going by the crowd at Taste of the South End, it's a lot of delicious food mixed with designer outfits, gym-toned bods, people whose fabulosity quotients are astronomically high and a handful of drag queens.

Held at the Cyclorama, the event, which benefits the AIDS Action Committee, attracted the likes of brunette bombshell Laura Elkman, perpetual scallywag Alex Clarke, hairless DJ Barry Scott, country bumpkin Jeff Coakley, city slicker Chris Horan, bright young things Spencer Corkin and Gillian Marino, Argentine heartthrob Santiago Castillo and Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence Novice Sister Rosetta Stone and Sister Eunice X, who was having a bit of trouble with her wimple.

Any occasion that allows for the use of the word "wimple" belongs in the thumbs-up category.

The tastings dished out by the neighborhood's best restaurants were delectable, a few people seemed to get a bit tipsy and any occasion that allows for the use of the word "wimple" automatically belongs in the thumbs-up category.

Referring to the restaurant Sibling Rivalry, one guest said, "There's none of that in my family... except that the kids like me better."

The most amusing exchange, however, was:

"That just warms the cockles of my heart... and elsewhere."

"Good. I'll take your temperature later."

Who's Sari Now?

Sitars, silk and samosas aren't exactly the first things that spring to mind when you think of France. But the former colonial outpost of Pondicherry (aka the Riviera of the East) is the region of India that most warmly embraces the land of ooh-la-la. Hence the theme of a cocktail reception and exhibit at the French Cultural Center.

Rose petals were strewn on the steps leading into the Back Bay townhouse. Franco-Tamil music filtered through the drawing rooms. Delicious Indian food was served, and, needless to say, the wine was better than anything you'd get at a party commemorating the British days of the Raj.

The Nouveau Riche Are Coming! The Nouveau Riche Are Coming!

No one bothered to hang a lantern in the Old North Church, and, in any case, the guest of honor presumably arrived by airplane, but super-luxe silversmiths Christofle hosted a party to benefit the Paul Revere House at its swanky Back Bay boutique.

The director of their "haute orfevrerie" workshops, Jean-Claude Bourbon, was on hand (wearing what looked like an oversized christening gown, but what is presumably the garment sported by French master silversmiths) to explain the artistry and craftsmanship involved in making the gleaming objects on display. These included a sculpture of a sailboat cutting through the waves, a two-tiered Champagne bucket connected by art-nouveau rose vines and a four-foot silver palm tree that houses a Champagne bucket on top and flutes hanging underneath like coconuts. (Presumably, they're going after the Dubai market).

Guests such as bubbly PR babe Arin Starzyk, Back Bay socialite Joanna Humphrey and antiquarian Marc Glasberg "oohed" and "aahed" appreciatively, but the evening's highlight came when one guest pointed at a gigantic sterling ice bucket costing somewhere in the six-figure range and said, sarcastically, "I'm registering for my wedding. What do you think?" ✖✖✖

Noble Work

Once upon a time, there lived a happy, hoppity bunny named Fluffkin. He was a jolly rabbit who loved the sweet crunch of butter lettuce and the warmth of the sun on his twinkly, pink nose. Fluffkin lived under a honeysuckle tree with his friends Bumbly the hedgehog, Tweedle the squirrel and this guy named Lucien, who was fashionable and tended bar at Union.

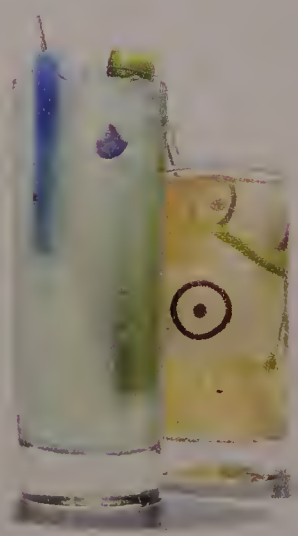
"Would anyone like to share a scrumptious brambleberry tart?" Bumbly asked his friends one evening. "It's fresh out of the oven, and I made it with extra brambleberries."

"Oh, yes, please," said Tweedle. "I'll get the napkins and put the kettle on for honeysuckle tea."

"I'm sick of honeysuckle tea!" shrieked Fluffkin. "It tastes like hot, rancid pus! Screw you all! Gaaah!"

Lucien, who was trained to recognize the symptoms of the DTs, quickly stirred up a pitcher of basil gimlets and poured a tall one for the frothing, convulsing rabbit. Fluffkin calmed down at once.

"That's better," said the bunny, the evil fire fading from his eyes. "I love you, Lucien. You're a lifesaver."



"No," said Lucien, helping himself to an enormous slice of brambleberry tart. He flashed a winning smile. "I'm a bartender."

In this issue, we pay homage to the world's most beloved profession. Also, Nick spent a week drinking his lunch, which left him haggard and reliant on spell-check.

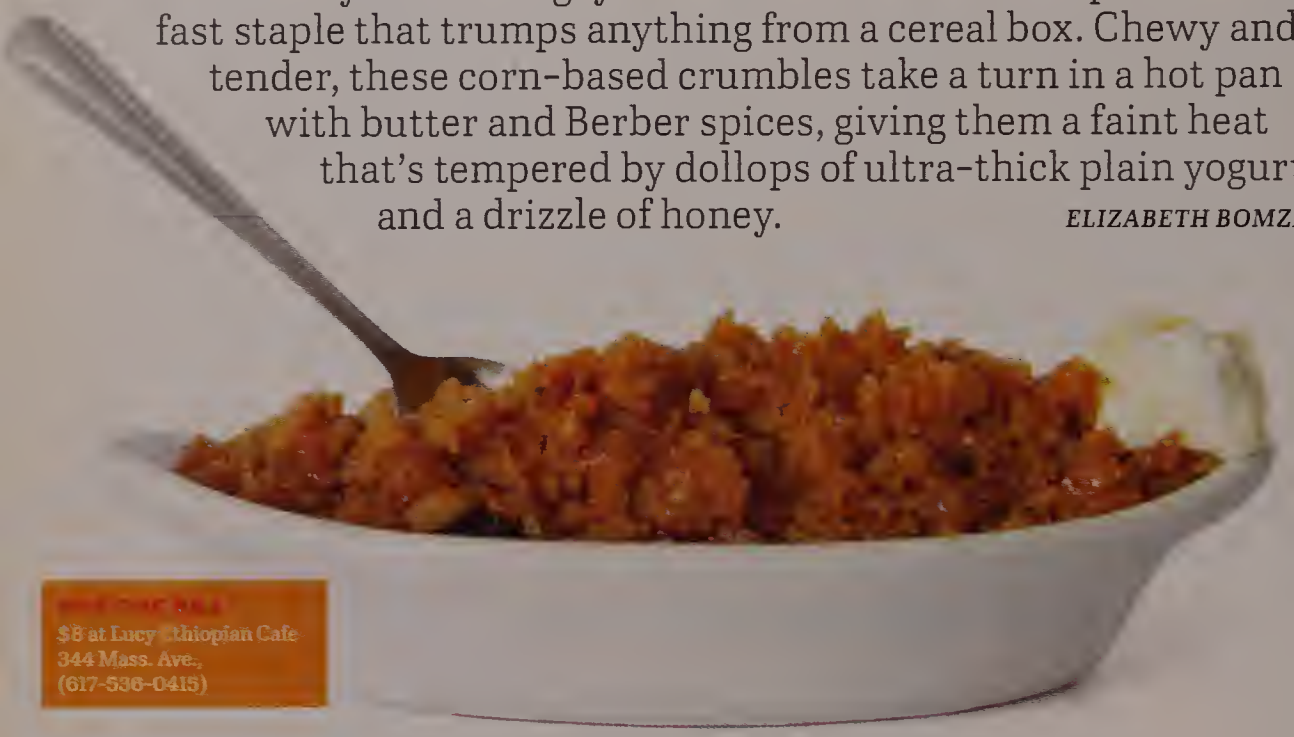
The Thinker's Drinker

PROOF POSITIVE



'I WANTED TO HAVE a site that presented the best of the Boston bar scene, and treated the top bartenders the way top chefs are treated," says Lauren Clark. It was 2006, the crest of the craft cocktail resurgence, when the former bartender, brewer and frustrated freelancer launched Drinkboston.com. Stocked with profiles, interviews and surveys like "Guilty Pleasures & Gateway Drinks," it's a place where newbies can learn and industry veterans can admit a former fondness for SoCo and Mountain Dew. "At the time, I thought I'm probably not the only person in the city interested in what these professionals are doing," Clark says. Now with 16,000 original hits a month, Clark has become a curator for Boston's spirited zeitgeist.

Good Eats

Breadwinner

Although Lucy Ethiopian Cafe's injera might be the best version of flatbread around (it's spongy, faintly sour and delicious), it's not even the most impressive dough-based item on the menu. Chef/owner Girmay Cirsto Ziegaye's che'che bsa is an Ethiopian breakfast staple that trumps anything from a cereal box. Chewy and tender, these corn-based crumbles take a turn in a hot pan with butter and Berber spices, giving them a faint heat that's tempered by dollops of ultra-thick plain yogurt and a drizzle of honey. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Thanks to celebs like Steven Tyler, Ke$ha and Selena Gomez. feather extensions are the new, must-have hair accessory. "At first I thought they were silly," says SalonCapri owner Nicholas Penna Jr. "But when I started to see them done right, they looked interesting. Then interesting turned to cool, and when American Idol started they turned into a craze." The tiny strands take just minutes to snap on. and can be washed and styled along with your own hair. You can go with crazy colors or stick to neutral shades of brown or black and white. They're the perfect solution if you're too chicken to dye your locks.

Q&A

LEAFY QUEEN

Hedda Lettuce (real name Steven Polito) is a drag comedian and singer. She's appeared on TV series including Sex and the City, Ugly Betty and Project Runway, and films like To Wong Foo, Thanks for Everything! Julie Newmar. The self-proclaimed "Queen of Green" appears at the W Boston Hotel on April 30.

What are you [illegible] scene?
I think in order to fit in, one needs to wear Abercrombie & Fitch and a baseball cap. It's like sex, though. You need the right amount of foreplay to loosen everyone up, and then it's very fun!

[illegible]?
I hope you aren't calling me easy! Being green is very important, and sometimes remembering to recycle can be a lot of work.

[illegible]?
I'm a drugstore kind of lady, and I'd say a really good Cover Girl mascara, some Max Factor cover-up, moisturizer, lip liner and—well, you can't buy this in a drugstore—but good bone structure. Have you seen my cheeks?

[illegible]?
No, my diet varies. I'm an equal opportunity eater. I like white men, black men, Asian men...

[illegible]?
My breasts are very large and heavy. I've been thinking of downsizing, but that's not what my public expects.

[illegible]?
Goodness, no. Cabbage makes me incredibly gassy. KYLE WRIGHT

Drink of the Moment

MELT DOWN

Giddy with gadgets and eager to experiment, Clio's Todd Maul has a penchant for twisting a cocktail's fundamental components. His latest target is seemingly simple: ice. Rather than just "making something smaller from something bigger," Maul makes functional ice cubes that build flavors.

Drinks like the TODD COLLINS and the BULL'S EYE GIN AND TONIC (both $13) are defined by the effects of ice. To create the Bull's Eye, Maul drills holes into 2-inch ice cubes and fills them with loomi—dried black lime. As they melt, the clear drink becomes increasingly dark, spicy and citrusy. The Collins, on the other hand, is garnished with a long blue block filled with candied violet. This transforms the drink from a light, lemony refreshment to an earthier, more complex, periwinkle-hued concoction.

"It's not about making drinks cooler, prettier or more fun," he explains. "It's about progress and taking something that's 'good enough' and making it great. Anything you can manipulate, you should. Not for the sake of manipulation, but to make a better drink."

Maul is currently perfecting a Verveine cocktail that'll feature a long thin sliver of cucumber frozen inside an ice sphere (a mold he invented himself). As the ice melts, the cucumber unravels to alter the liqueur's herbal flavor.

Discussing his menu of 80-plus drinks, Maul compares himself to a jazz musician. "The original menu was to prove that I could play the basics. Now watch for the riffs."

CATALYST CALL

The rush to Kendall continues.

NEW BEGINNINGS
William Kovel

EVEN BEFORE AUJOURD'HUI closed in 2009, executive chef William Kovel was imagining the restaurant he'd someday call his own, and what he'd call it: Catalyst.

Today, with his dream taking shape and the name acquiring extra resonance from its high-tech Kendall Square surroundings, Kovel says he's counting his new gray hairs and looking forward to opening in late summer.

Catalyst will be more casual than the haute Aujourd'hui, "with fun, whimsical takes on New England and bar food," Kovel says. There'll be tabletops without white linen and decor incorporating natural woods to create "a beautiful, comforting space." It's a big space, too, with more than 80 seats in the dining room, patio and lounge area, as well as a private room for corporate functions.

SPEAKING OF KENDALL, Kika Tapas Bar is expected to open in late summer or early fall. Kika, which is named for a character in one of Pedro Almodóvar's films, is helmed by Fernando Leon, owner of Solea in Waltham, and his business partner Carlos Reverendo.

Leon promises that Kika will be "a very sexy addition" to the plethora of eateries springing up in the area.

Does all this activity mean the economy is improving? Maybe not, says Leon. As he points out, restaurant owners can negotiate and score deals on rent. Meaning, we hope, more places offering reasonable price points on the way.

FINALLY, add Newton's 51 Lincoln to the roster of restaurants with a rooftop garden. Chef/owner Jeff Fournier is working with Jim Buckle of Allandale Farm to grow everything from kale to tomatoes—maybe even hops and grapes—atop some 1,800 square feet of roof space.

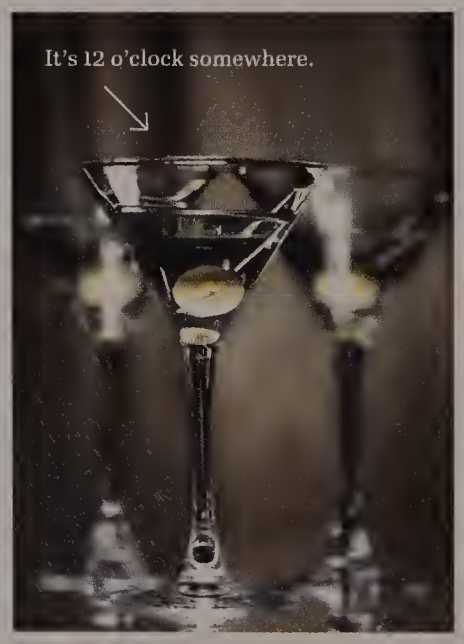
WASTED EFFORTS



How to be intoxicated, on the clock

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

LUNCHTIME IN THE FINANCIAL district. I've got a meeting with an important source. I show up early, place an order and wait. He slinks in, shakes off the rain and darts his head both ways, like he's about to dash across the Central Artery. "I want to make sure there's no one here I know," he says, peering down at the notebook to my left, and the martini to my right.

A few days earlier, I was slumped on a couch at the Four Seasons, trying to enjoy my first martini lunch. As usual, my timing was off. It was 1:30 pm on a Friday, and my visions of smarmy masters of the universe abusing expense accounts had materialized as a roundtable of young mothers. Highballs and cigars had been replaced by a fleet of $600 strollers and a couple of put-upon nannies.

With the resurgence of craft cocktails and the popularity of Mad Men, the allure of the three-martini lunch has grown. Imagine a world where a Manhattan and a nap is good business, not grounds for dismissal. Its disappearance is often blamed on Jimmy Carter, who condemned the practice during his 1976 presidential campaign. Carter has always been known as a bit of a buzzkill. His opponent, Gerald Ford, called the three-martini lunch "the epitome of American efficiency." Ford was known to fall down a lot.

Looking for expert advice, I turned to Improper contributor John Spooner, who's worked in the Boston financial scene for decades. "It's like being in training," he said. "If your body gets used to it, you learn how to handle it." In the gin-soaked '60s, he explains, everyone went out for lunch, "and I used to think that if I had a drink, I'd dare get on the phone and pitch, whereas before, I wouldn't." Today, with the speed of business increasing and downtime dropping, Spooner says 98 percent of his coworkers eat at their desk, the lack of social lubricant leading to an office life both "less civil and less civilized."

Case in point: my lunchtime source's Blackberry perched next to my martini. We were at Brandy Pete's, a bar that opened at the end of Prohibition and in which the lunchtime drink special is now a "skinny" margarita. As we sat among suits slurping iced teas, my source—in his 20s and representing the newest generation of Boston finance—explained why the three-martini meal is dead (or at least restricted to Europe). There's the financial liability. There's intense competition. Then, of course, there's perception. It's not that people don't indulge, they just save it for dinner, as "someone who drank at lunch could have a problem." I asked the waitress to chase my martini with a pint. "That's a much more common order," she said with a coy smile.

"I think she admires my bravado," I said.

"Yeah, she probably also thinks you have no job," replied my source.

The following day I returned to the Four Seasons, and as I waited for another friend in finance and watched Toyota execs sip ice water, I knew it was time to kick off the training wheels. The Bristol Lounge had designed a new cocktail menu, and we were going to wade our way through. As inebriation took hold between rounds of tasty tangerine sidecars and something called "Pork Chops & Apple Sauce," I determined that our changing cocktail culture is just as much to blame for the demise of the martini lunch as our evolving business practices. Things are bigger and faster now, arguably better. But Don Draper could drop a project in the mail and knock off early. Savoring the simple pleasures, his celebratory aperitif would be free of yogurt. There's a dignified afternoon tipple, and then there's bacon bourbon.

Regardless of the vehicle, I found alcohol slightly improved my focus upon my return to the office. It was mostly out of guilt, as I figured I was already drunk, so I shouldn't try to get away with slacking, too. My drinking partner reported that she multitasked her way through the afternoon. Of course, all plans for the gym were scrapped and replaced with more drinking, so, between the martinis and the Chesterfields, it's not hard to see how previous generations amassed so much cognitive heart failure. It's a difficult pace to maintain.

The following day I conducted an interview at Eastern Standard. I had something dry with a twist. She drank something dark and bitter. Leaving after a single, satisfying drink, I thought I'd alchemized the formula for happy productivity. Then I forgot my notebook on the bar, never to be seen again. ✖✖✖

SOCK IT TO HIM

I THINK YOUR NAME WAS JOE: You were wearing a cashmere sweater at Clerys. Thanks for the Tequila Sunrise. And the gentlemanly arm to my hotel with my four friends, whom you blissfully ignored in your attempt to get some. In a rush on the way out? You left your socks. They're happily floating down the Charles. Truly not yours

To the recent UPenn grad who tried to steal a cab from me at 2 am on Columbus Ave. on Saturday night:
As our argument progressed, you asked me where I went to college. You wanted me to know that you went to UPenn, the trademark move of someone who's still immature enough to think that the rest of the world is impressed by how smart you were in high school. When I remained unfazed, you called me a lesbian, as though that were an insult. You might be "well-educated," but you're ignorant and rude, and the world doesn't look kindly on that combination. I'd rather walk

To my windshield wipers:
I really don't like you. Don't get me wrong, I used to love you, but when I need you the most, you abandon me. As soon as the weather gets cold or messy, you curl up faster than Lloyd Christmas encountering Sea Bass in a bathroom stall. I understand that you don't like the cold—I sure don't—but why do you clean every other part of the windshield except the part that is right in front of my eyes? It's like you're doing it on purpose just to piss me off. I can't wait to replace you.

The Undiscovered Bottle

Every liquor cabinet has its dusty secrets. In a spirit of exploration, two Improper editors sat down with Conor Hadlington, assistant manager of the M Bar at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston, to give mystery bottles their due.

BOLS GENEVER

CONOR: A grain-based spirit from which gin is derived. You won't have the Christmas-tree flavor coming through. But you can really taste the aromatics.
KYLE: Much closer to vodka than gin. Clean, doesn't linger on the palate.
ANDREW: A gin alternative for when juniper berries seem objectionable.

LILLET

CONOR: It's a wine, like vermouth. Very crisp, clean. Famous from the Vesper, which James Bond orders in Casino Royale.
KYLE: Really sweet, similar to an ice wine. Notes of peach and grapefruit.
ANDREW: The Vesper is now my drink, and I shall order it to the point of injury.

PEYCHAUD'S BITTERS

CONOR: Less clove, less hot spice than Angostura bitters. More subtle.
KYLE: Not nearly as bitter as I was anticipating. Almost flavorless.
ANDREW: Aniseed is the devil's urine.

B&B

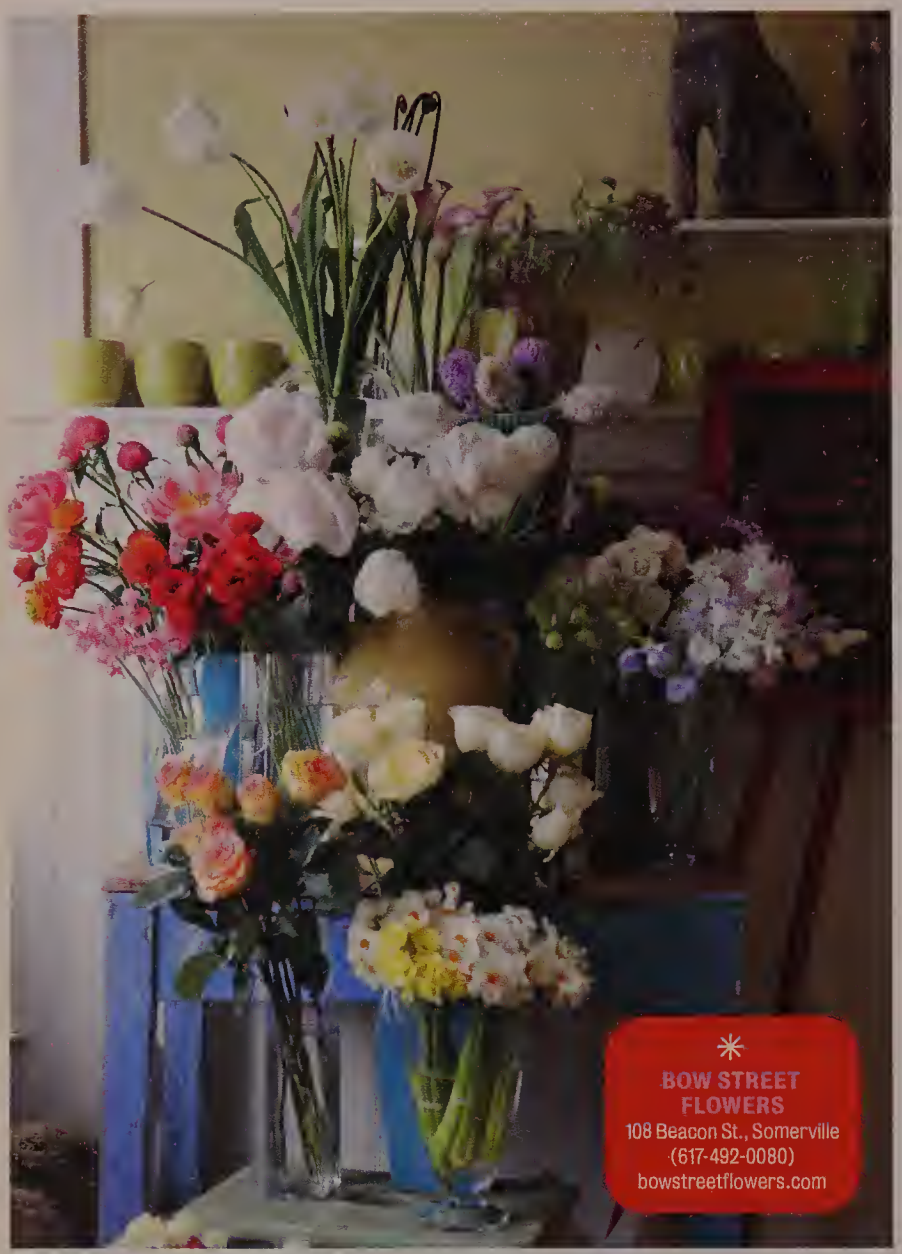
CONOR: An herbal, sipping liqueur for brandy drinkers. Medicinal and very sweet.
KYLE: Really strong flavor profile with a lot of menthol. Tastes like mouthwash.
ANDREW: Mouthwash that will dissolve your molars.

BAS ARMAGNAC

CONOR: A wine-based spirit with a deep flavor profile. It has more sun and is less refined than fine Champagne Cognac.
KYLE: Definitely picked up on the "rough" aspect. There are caramel notes, but the heat is overpowering.
ANDREW: Tastes like Hennessy that has Courvoisier on its breath.

AMARO MELETTI

CONOR: Similar to Averna, this is thinner than sherry. A good digestif.
KYLE: Sweet but not syrupy. Herbal notes actually work here, instead of overpower.
ANDREW: Weirdly anemic. It has absolutely no aftertaste, which feels like passing by a mirror and not seeing a reflection.



KÜBLER ABSINTHE

CONOR: A very strong flavor of aniseed. Goes with cassis.
KYLE: I thought absinthe was supposed to be green. This just burned off every nose hair I have.
ANDREW: Make it go away.

ORCHID LYCHEE

CONOR: Never drink this on its own.
KYLE: Thick and syrupy. I'd want to try it in a cocktail, though.
ANDREW: Sugar. Lychee. Pointless.

Commanding Officer

"When I'm staying in a hotel, I don't usually want to eat in the hotel restaurant," says Michael Guleserian, manager at the Sheraton Commander Hotel. "When we started rethinking our restaurant, we had that in mind. I think we've created a place for the neighborhood and for visitors alike." Nubar, the Commander's new restaurant and lounge, is the final piece in a revamp stretching back 14 years.

NUBAR
16 Garden St., Cambridge
(617-234-1365)
nubarcambridge.com

Named for Edward Nubar Guleserian, Michael's father and the hotel's owner for the last 42 years, the Harvard Square spot was stripped to the brick floor and modernized with a new fireplace, color scheme and abstract photography of Cambridge landmarks. The bar, constructed of slabs of honey onyx, emits an incandescent light that causes each cocktail placed on its surface to softly glow. It's a rock more commonly seen in spas, which is fitting, as the leather seats and calming monochromatic decor practically compel guests to take a breather.

Ashmont Grill/Icarus alum Bill Flumerfelt works with executive chef Tom Connaughton in the kitchen, where they'll plate up homestyle dishes like a spiced parsnip soup ($9), grilled pork loin with littleneck clams ($24) and pan-roasted duck breast drizzled with rhubarb and cherry sauce ($27).

Nubar's approach is simple and sharp. Careful not to impose an overwrought atmosphere, the hotel has provided a blank canvas for its patrons. "We're so fortunate to be in such a rich cultural neighborhood," says Guleserian. "This is a crossroads, and it's a place for anyone." KYLE WRIGHT

QUITE A PICKLE

What happens when a New Yorker writer runs a corner store?

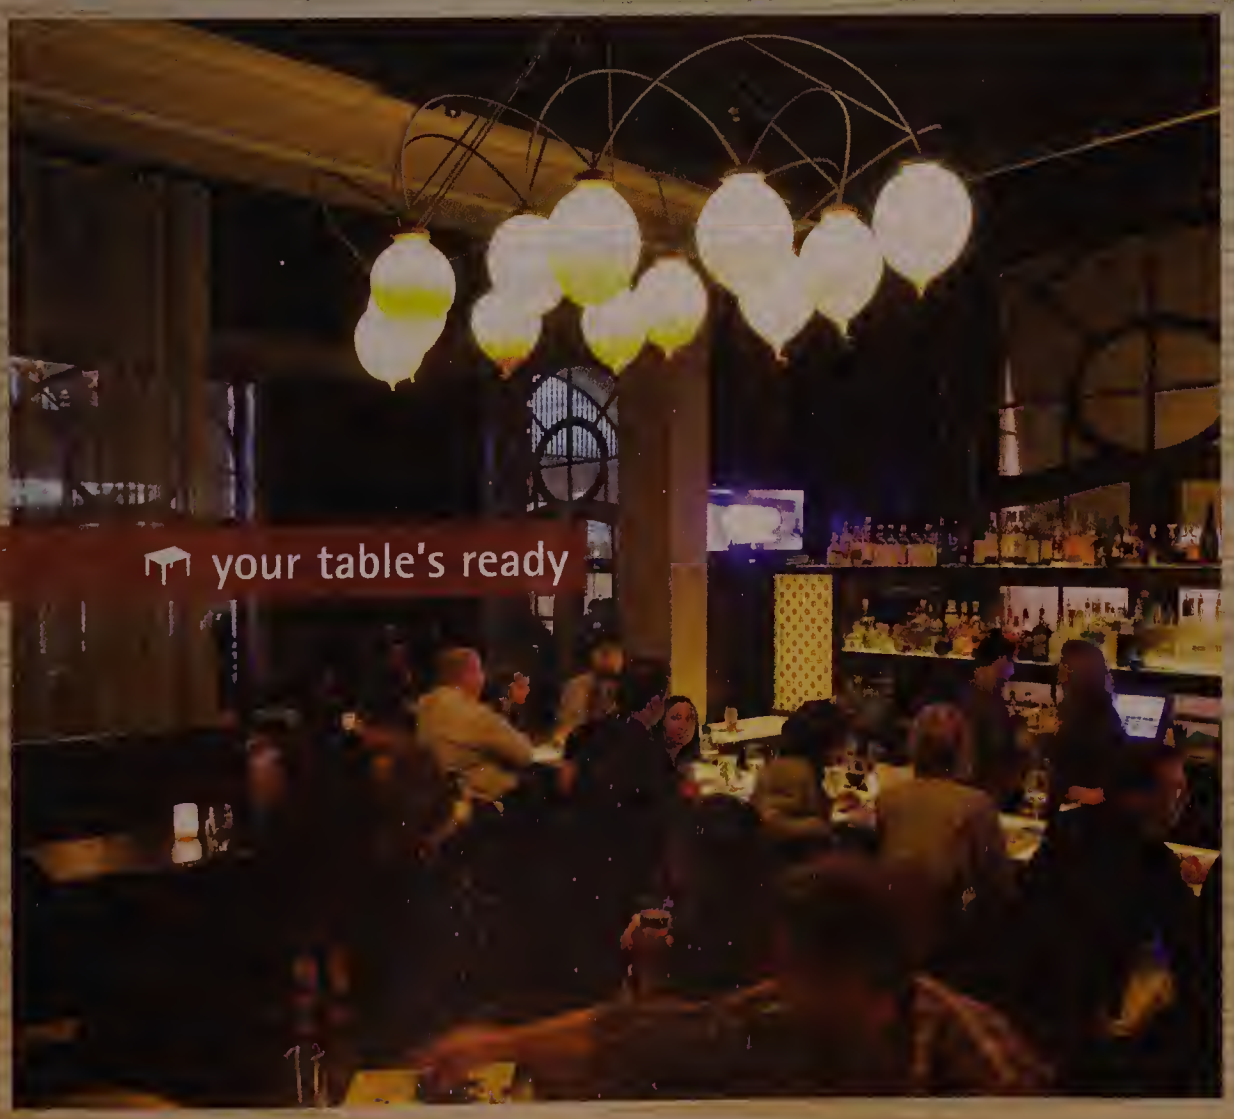
MANY CONTRASTING worlds and sensibilities squash into this memoir about running a Brooklyn deli. There's the owner, scrappy Korean immigrant Kay, and her upwardly mobilized daughter, Gab, a lawyer. Gab's husband, Ben, a writer for The New Yorker and The Paris Review, brings the cool Puritan breezes of his WASP background into the narrative.



Collectively, they decide to buy and run a neighborhood deli. It's a world away from George Plimpton, with its lottery tickets, junk food and colorful cast of regulars—a location that doesn't necessarily adapt to change. One customer strips naked and has to be shouted out of the store. An underaged kid buys cigarettes and incurs fines that almost topple the business. An improbable employee named Dwayne carries a gun, talks tough and dirty, and is disruptive while somehow remaining the lovable soul of the store. Howe paints this spicy, pickled society without condescension, as well as showing the amusing similarities between it and the flaky-fancy Plimpton literary world. He makes you laugh out loud in both locales. ✖✖✖

My Korean Deli
By Ben Ryder Howe

Howe is from Massachusetts.

FROM PAGE 158: "The disassembly of my old self has been underway now, I realize, since we moved in with Gab's family (how quickly one's identity begins to crack when there are no New Yorkers stacked next to the toilet!) and only accelerated after we bought the store. I feel like I've bonded with the deli, sort of the way you bond with your seat on an airplane during an eighteen-hour flight. It's cramped, it's miserable, and when you get up you feel like a piece of boiled meat, but you'd fight to the death with anyone who tried to steal it from you."

WE MEAT AGAIN

At Bosphorus, quality is offset by repetition.

THE RIGHT CHOICE The meze platter for two provides welcome variety.

MY MOST MEMORABLE meal last year took place in Istanbul, Turkey, at a small restaurant on the Asian side of the Bosphorus strait. The owner, equal parts chef and culinary historian, delighted in showing off the diversity of Turkish cuisine. We ate meat stews with tart plums, stuffed lamb intestines, offal aplenty, vibrant herbs and vegetables with nary a kebab in sight. Which was why I wanted to try Bosphorus, the Inman Square restaurant fronted by executive chef Yahya Erdogan, president of the Istanbul Professional Cooks Association. On its website, Bosphorus touts its traditional Turkish cuisine. What it delivers, however, are safe, generic Middle Eastern standards.

With its warm tones and dim lights, Bosphorus resembles an elegant cocktail lounge, even sporting a lengthy bar area. This vibe is something of a red herring since the restaurant only serves beer and wine—probably why the bar was quiet on all three of my visits.

The menu isn't oriented toward small plates, but the best and most reasonably priced dishes were the appetizers. The meze platter for two ($15) was a sampler of all the cold mezes (with the exception of ezme, or spicy tomato paste, which came complimentary with pita). Hummus proved heavy on the tahini and the bulgur salad tasted bland, but chargrilling imparted a pleasant smokiness to the eggplant. The artichoke salad ($9)—artichoke hearts dressed lightly with olive oil and lemon juice—made for a good palate cleanser. Overwhelmed by mint, the unfortunate lentil soup ($6) tasted at once overseasoned and watery.

The hot appetizers were more consistent if repetitive, as they recycled the same ingredients. The etli sarma (meat-stuffed grape leaves, $9) and etli dolma (meat-stuffed zucchini,$10) both sported an identical filling of ground beef, bulgur, pine nuts, black currants and onions. Both dishes were baked in tomato sauce and drizzled with yogurt. Manti (described as "Turkish ravioli," $12) proved to be small dumplings stuffed with beef and dressed with yogurt and dried mint. Hearty and delicious, they would've sufficed as a meal.

SAUVE SURROUNDINGS Bosphorus' polished interior

Rehashed ingredients, spices and techniques dominated the main courses as well. Nearly all the meat entrees came with rice and interchangeable sautéed vegetables. In this kitchen, dried herbs trump fresh, and every dish is either stuffed, grilled or baked. Yet, with the exception of the soggy, flavorless yogurtlu ispanak (yogurt and spinach, $17), nothing derailed a meal. The mixed kebabs ($24)—skewers of chicken, beef, and lamb tenderloin alongside a lamb chop—were tender and juicy. The Bosphorus bake ($22), essentially a lamb-shank Wellington, tasted a bit gamey, but at least it was interesting. Patlican guvec (eggplant casserole, $19) was a solid yet silky combination of baked eggplant and beef. Its fraternal twin, karniyarik (stuffed eggplant, $19), reiterated the satisfying, if now truly boring, ground-beef-stuffing-and-tomato-sauce routine. Perhaps my biggest quibble with the entrees was the jarring price hike from the appetizers. Though all the items are well prepared, a jump of around $10 feels steep for a section of the menu not offering more in terms of variety.

Sadly, this disparity between quality and value carries over to the wine list. While Turks have been making wine since time immemorial, it turns out there's a reason they're not better known for it. Unless you particularly enjoy notes of vinegar, stick with Efes, the Turkish equivalent of Coors. It's nothing fancy, but refreshing all the same.

Make sure to save room for baklava ($7), an order of which delivers two pieces of pistachio and one piece of walnut. Sweet, crispy and wonderfully sticky, it left me wishing the rest of the menu tasted as memorable. ✖✖✖

LUCKY STARS

The American Ireland Fund's Boston Young Leaders group held its annual St. Patrick's Day benefit at the Boston Harbor Hotel on March 10. With live music, an open bar, hors d'oeuvres and a silent auction, the party brought more than 450 people together and raised $120,000.

Revels celebrated its 40th anniversary on March 12 and said good-bye to executive director Gayle Rich, who is retiring from the seasonal music and dance organization. The "40th Anniversary Gayla" was held at Harvard's Annenberg Hall. Performances, tributes and a dinner entertained 400 guests. Together, they raised over $130,000 for Revels' educational programs.

WE MEAN IT

It's true. Everyone else in the country is actually friendly.

Read more at improper.com/blogs

WHEREVER YOU LIVE, your perception of normal is pegged to your immediate surroundings. If you live in Manhattan, you don't blink at paying $2,000 a month to reside in a glorified closet. If you're in L.A., you might not notice weeks of consecutive sunny days. And if you live in Boston, you're accustomed to accepting a certain measure of aloofness from your fellow citizens. If strangers in Boston try to strike up a friendly conversation, I reflexively assume they want to drug me and steal my internal organs. That hasn't happened, of course, but only because I don't talk much to strangers.

After 10 years here, I just take it for granted that any random person on the street will be rude, cynical, sour, dour, drunk, icy, confrontational or some combination thereof. But with my recent travels taking me to the South and Midwest, I was reminded that elsewhere in the country, people are friendly to each other. I swear it's true.

A few weeks ago, my buddy Murph and I were driving through rural Michigan when we stopped at a Subway for lunch. When the woman assembling my sub asked if I wanted anything on it, I asked for some Dijon.

"You want what?" she replied. "Dijon? I've never heard of that." She shook her head in wonderment, acting as if I'd requested her to slather my turkey-on-wheat with gold leaf and present it in a humidor of the finest mahogany. I tried to act as if I'd indeed asked for something unusual, but I'm not very good at feigning sincerity. So my mouth said, "Oh, yeah—the spicy mustard is what I meant. Sorry about that," but I'm pretty sure my face was saying, "Who the hell reaches adulthood without ever encountering a jar of Grey Poupon?"

The interaction only got more bizarre from there. I assumed I'd embarrassed her with my worldly knowledge of exotic condiments, so I expected a typical Northeastern response—i.e., for her to serve up the rest of my order with a dose of ire toward Mr. Fancy Dee-john. Instead, she doubled down on the good-natured cheer, explaining that I'd happened to order the sandwich of the day, and she seemed genuinely happy for me that this fortuitous selection resulted in a bill of only $2.99. Confused by her chipper demeanor, I muttered something about turkey and went on my way.

Think that's funny? Send unbiased e-mails to ezra@improper.com.

James McQuillan

As we walked into the parking lot, Murph observed, "I think that girl wanted to give you some smooches out behind the Dumpster."

So he picked up on the odd vibe, too. But then Murph is also a Northeasterner, so I think it's entirely possible that what we perceived as flirtatiousness was actually just an example of typical congeniality. Hey, that girl wasn't totally adversarial—she must want me!

I had another encounter with friendly strangers down in New Orleans. My brother-in-law, Rick, and I were playing golf. As a twosome, we got paired with a couple of Southern guys in their 70s. One of them was wearing a pith helmet. While I was entertained by the thought of meeting someone who owns and uses a pith helmet, I was bummed at the prospect of censoring my behavior for five hours. To make matters worse, Pith Helmet committed the cardinal sin of random golf pairings: giving swing advice.

After a particularly disastrous drive that landed several fairways to the right, Pith Helmet solemnly said, "Now, Ezra, I'm gonna give you a tip that's gonna straighten that right out." Great. I can't wait. "You're gonna line up with your front foot a little farther back, relax your grip... and make sure you keep your pecker to the left." Pith Helmet laughed uproariously. He got me. I'll admit that I didn't see that one coming from a guy dressed for a safari with Teddy Roosevelt.

A few holes later, Rick remarked, "Man, everyone's so friendly down here." Pith Helmet's buddy agreed, saying, "That's true. We just met you boys, and I'll bet you already feel like you know us well enough to buy us a couple beers."

We didn't actually do that, because, post-golf, we were in a typical Yankee rush to get somewhere else. Namely, a bar where some of Rick's friends were congregating. Outside the bar, we'd barely sat down at a sidewalk table when a guy walked by wearing a toupee. And not just a toupee, but one that resembled a terrible bowl cut. A member of our party, a lifelong Bostonian named Ed, regarded the bad hairpiece with a look of disdainful wonder and blurted, "Who made your wig, Moe Howard?" It was the first mean-spirited thing I'd heard all day. I laughed my ass off.

You know, I think it's lame when Southerners fly the Confederate flag. But the ones who insist on referring to the Civil War as "The War of Northern Aggression"? They might have a point. ✖✖✖

PAPER TIGERS

The truth behind the 2011 Red Sox

A FEW WEEKS AGO, I watched "the Kirk Gibson Game" on ESPN Classic. You know, when the hobbled Dodgers slugger limped to home plate in the last inning of Game 1 of the 1988 World Series to face the second-greatest closer of all-time, Dennis Eckersley. (That bastard from the Bronx is No. 1.)

There are two outs, and Gibson is grimacing with every half-swing due to the pain in his damaged knee. The Eck even appears to have him a few times.

But then it happens. A 3-and-2 count and it's gone, high over A's star outfielder Jose Canseco's head. Gibson pumps his fist as he crawls around the bases. Dodgers skipper Tommy Lasorda flops all over the field in celebration. The Dodgers win.

Every time I see that rerun I'm in shock. Remember the call by Jack Buck? "I don't believe what I just saw!"

Well, a couple weeks into the 2011 season, and I'm in shock again and can't believe what I'm seeing. It's a different story this time around, though. Two weeks in and the Boston Red Sox earned a paltry two wins. This was two weeks of shock, which turned to anger, which turned into a heavy dose of hard reality.

I told all my buddies that Carl Crawford was a fantastic signing. He's a great hitter, an exceptional defender and makes the elite athletes around him look like they're running through quicksand.

Adrian Gonzalez, I believed, was the second coming of Manny Ramírez. He'd hit 40 homers and knock in 130 RBI in this lineup. It wouldn't matter where in the order he batted. Just give him a Louisville Slugger and let him go to work.

The best part about getting A-Gon was the fact that nobody from the Red Sox's current roster was dealt in the trade. Sure, they lost a future major leaguer in Casey Kelly, maybe a very good one, but we were putting a truckload of RBIs back into the equation.

But all these optimistic thoughts formed this winter, back when I was imagining potential lineups and my heart would begin to pound. I told everyone that Terry Francona is the luckiest manager in the league.

The Boston Herald had a headline splattered all over the front page: "Best Team Ever!" Sure, it was bold. But didn't we all think they had a shot? Didn't we all start planning for an October showdown with the National League's version of perfection, the Philadelphia Phillies? Weren't we all acting pretty foolish?

Turns out, maybe Crawford isn't worth the contract the Sox gave him. When you pay someone $20 million, you expect that player to be a game-changer. This winter, I was convinced that he was. Now I'm not so cocky. But hey, it's not my cash.

Gonzalez's performance will probably end up closer to expectations. He's got a beautiful swing. He plays a great first base. Everything he does, he does with grace. It's just that he's more of a 30–home run, 100-RBI guy than the Manny-on-steroids sideshow we so adored.

The other aspect of the 2011 team that I overlooked was the pitching. I was nervous about John Lackey and Daisuke Matsuzaka last year. Nothing changed this winter. So how did I end up with my rosy Red Sox glasses on this spring?

And Josh Beckett, one of my personal favorites, was coming off a three-year funk. Yes, there were some notable performances and stretches, but he wasn't the Beckett of 2007. He was a hero that year, particularly in the playoffs.

Jon Lester is as good as advertised. Feels nice to say that about someone on the roster. I believe Clay Buchholz will take further steps toward being the pitcher we believe he can be. But will either guy ultimately prove to be dominant? The rotation is loaded with potential talent, but there needs to be someone to grab the reins.

Perhaps the most painful aspect to this opening struggle is that, in our haste to crown the Sox the World Series champs, we mocked the New York Yankees. It's a lot harder to talk trash when your voice is muffled by the teams on top.

I've even begun to wonder if the two guys the Sox added, Gonzalez and Crawford, are better than the guys they let go, Víctor Martínez and Adrián Beltré. I wonder if Martínez and Beltré, with a healthy Dustin Pedroia and Kevin Youkilis, might've formed a better squad then the one currently taking the field.

For Boston sports fans, this isn't exactly our first brutal wake-up call. I remember being in Glendale, Ariz., three and a half years ago, thinking the Super Bowl would just mean 60 minutes of football and a bad halftime show before the Patriots could finally be coronated.

There's reason for hope. The Red Sox season isn't totally lost. I realize it doesn't look good, especially with Toronto and Baltimore finally being decent competition instead of sparring partners for the Sox and the Yankees.

The Sox lineup is formidable. Every night, there are seven guys who can make magic happen. And with weak pitching all over the majors, it's not like the Red Sox rotation pales in comparison. Also, the guys in the bullpen have been holding their own.

But expectations have morphed into hopes. The prospect of 100 wins is comical. And as for being "the Best Team Ever," that's not even funny.

On paper, the Sox should be around come late September, and, cross my fingers, possibly in October, if a little luck goes their way. Maybe the pressure is off now, and that's the only change they really needed. As sports fans, we can talk ourselves into anything. ✖✖✖

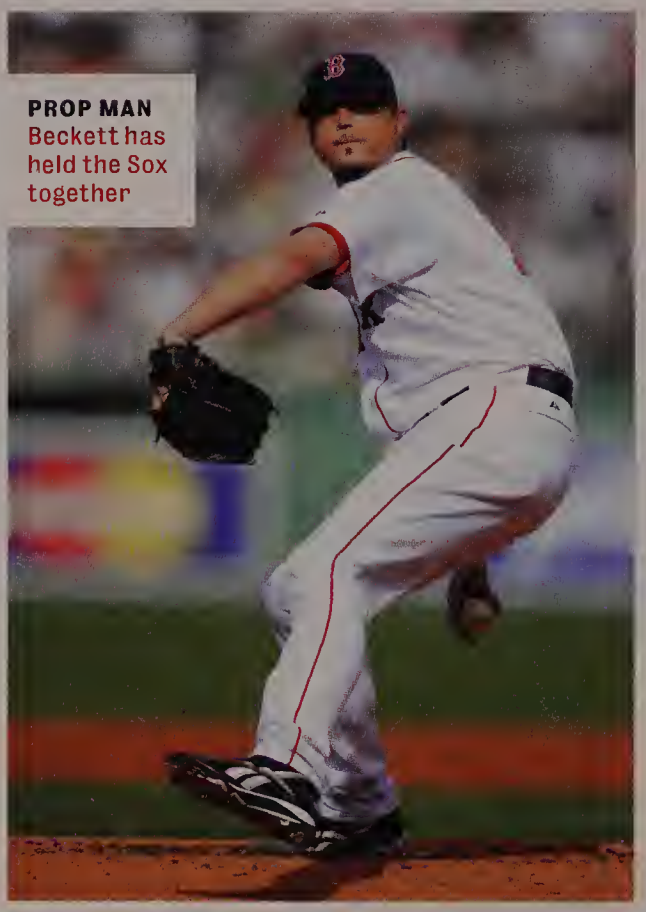
ON CARL, ADRIAN, WELKER AND DREW

2 PLAYOFF MIND GAMES

Reverse Psychology Deadlines suck, as I'm forced to write this on the eve of Game 4 between the Bruins and Canadiens. By the time you read this, who knows what's happening? Maybe Peter Chiarelli and Claude Julien have been axed. Maybe the B's have already moved on and are surging toward the Conference Finals. But the one thing we know for sure: This isn't the year they win it all.

Knock on Wood But is it for the Celtics? Do you still feel they can get it done? Did you ever? I'm assuming they beat the Knicks. Which is dangerous, but with a 2-0 lead, you can be a little confident (while also terrified that your confidence will somehow jinx the series). But in all seriousness, I think they'll get to Miami and then move on to Chicago before their season ends.



3 Random Thoughts

A Man of Morals In a recent interview, Ben Roethlisberger told ESPN that he won't live with his fiancée before marriage because it violates his religious beliefs. Very respectable, Ben. You're quite the clergyman. But what I think you meant was that it violates your ability to host get-togethers in your bathroom.

Speaking of Violations I'm shocked to see Manny Ramirez's career end in such a shameful and controversial manner. Honestly, I can't believe that he'd ever—nah, I'm kidding. It makes sense. But I don't care. Like the urine stains on the inner walls of the Green Monster, the memories Manny gave us can never be erased.

Heading to the Hall If the NFL season ever starts, Drew Bledsoe will likely be inducted as the latest member of the Patriots Hall of Fame. It's a well-deserved honor for Drew. After all, he really did change the face of football in New England. On that note, let's all take a moment and thank God for Mo Lewis.

5 SOX THOUGHTS

PROP MAN Beckett has held the Sox together

Beckett's Back When the season began, we weren't quite ready to close the door on Josh Beckett's career, but it appeared that his days as a top-notch starter were deader than JD Drew's personality. Well, Beckett clearly had other plans, because April's marked his unexpected return to greatness. His dominance clogged the drain before the entire Sox season slipped down the toilet, and now the rest of team is finally coming around. Well, except for...

Counting on Carl Last issue, I criticized the fans for overreacting to Carl Crawford's slow start. This issue? Um, Carl... come on, man! Listen, I'm still not worried. Am I frustrated? Sure. Is the tension surrounding each at bat so awkward and uncomfortable that I can barely watch? You bet. But I still believe, and when he breaks out, I'll be waiting there like Billy Madison: "Carl! So nice to see you!"

Yo, Adrian If there's anyone in the Sox clubhouse who's not complaining about Crawford's slow start, it's Adrian Gonzalez. To be honest, it hasn't even felt like he's on the team. He hasn't been great. He hasn't been awful. He's been invisible. And $154 million is a hell of a lot to pay for Gonzalez the Goateed Ghost.

A Man Named Jed For a second this spring, it seemed like Jed Lowrie might follow the path of former prospects like Wilton Veras and Phil Plantier (miss you, Phil!) and disappear before reaching his full potential. Lowrie couldn't stay healthy; he didn't have a natural position; he just wasn't getting it. Looks like it finally clicked, as he's found a home as the Sox starting shortstop. Meanwhile, Marco Scutaro's headed out on the path of Edgar Renteria and Julio Lugo. Bye-bye.

Rolling the Dice No one's worse at their worst than Daisuke Matsuzaka. But if he can throw down a few more outings like he did on Marathon Monday, it'll be like Vicodin for Red Sox Nation, making the torturous start far more tolerable. After all, he's still only the fifth starter. What? You'd prefer Matt Clement?

1 ONE MAJOR UPGRADE

How about that new scoreboard at Fenway? The old scoreboard had been an eyesore for years, one of many out-of-date features that limited the viewing experience. But now, it almost feels like Fenway's finally caught up. If it wasn't for, you know, just about everything else in the stadium.

4 DATES TO WATCH

4/28: "Hey, Mike. It's Bill. You wanna make a trade?" "Hey, Marvin. Belichick here. You, uh, feel like making a deal?" "Hey, Tony. Let's make something happen!" (The NFL Draft starts tonight.)

4/29: The Sox kick off an 11-game home stand. That's two starts for John Lackey, and two losses he'll blame on someone else.

5/1: Wes Welker turns 30, which sounds both reasonable and unfathomable at the same time. But, hey, 30's a confusing year.

5/7: Welcome to the 137th running of the Kentucky Derby, where if you're not dressed like a douche, you're just not trying hard enough.

"It's a morning show, so we try not to hit people over the head."

Soroff On JEFF GLOR

The network anchor opines about TV careers, caffeine and Al Jazeera.

BROADCAST JOURNALIST JEFF GLOR IS THE NEWS ANCHOR OF The Early Show on CBS. A native of Tonawanda, N.Y., he graduated from Syracuse University in 1997, and, until 2003, he co-anchored the evening news at WSTM-TV Channel 3 in Syracuse. He moved to Boston and joined WHDH-TV Channel 7, where he served as a weekday reporter and weekend anchor until 2007, when he made the jump to New York. Glor was the anchor of the Saturday edition of the CBS Evening News and a national correspondent until he signed onto The Early Show last fall. He lives with his wife, Nicole, and son, Jack, in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: Does CBS encourage you to be a hard-core news guy or keep it light?
Jeff Glor: I have to deliver the headlines and the important information at the top and bottom of every hour in the morning, but it's a morning show, so we try not to hit people over the head.

Do you soften it because it's so early?
You're going to see different stories at 7 o'clock in the morning than at 6:30 at night. That said, in my role as news anchor on the show, we're trying to find the best and most compelling stories we can.

I've noticed during cooking segments that you're a better anchor than a chef.
[Laughs.] My cooking is frightening at best.

What time do you go to bed?
It varies. I try to get at least six hours. It's never normal to get up that early.

So you never get used to it?
Not really. Someone once said, "There's nothing wrong with getting up at 3 or 4 in the morning except 3 or 4 in the afternoon." But it's so much fun, it's worth it.

Aspect of your appearance you alter the most for your job?
We call it war paint, not makeup. It's never comfortable to me, and it always feels awkward. I can't wait to get it off when we're done.

Do you think you'd make a good drag queen because of your vast experience with makeup?
[Laughs.] No comment.

So is there enough caffeine in the world to get you through the day?
There are some mornings when I feel like there isn't. The slugging down of coffee starts vigorously around 5 o'clock.

Biggest mistake you ever made on a story?
Anytime we get a number or statistic or fact wrong, it's something I think about a lot afterward and never want to see happen again.

Is Fox News fair and balanced?
I don't want to get into what other networks do. My focus is on what we do.

But you watch it.
Of course. That's part of my job. But I don't feel like I'm in a position to judge what the other guys are doing.

How about Al Jazeera?
I watched a decent amount of it when I was in Iraq. It's hard to see in the U.S., but any time there are more options, it's a good thing. I believe Hillary Clinton kind of commended their coverage recently.

Most embarrassing on-air faux pas?
I'm always worried about sneezing, but I've never actually done it. It's just this fear I have.

What's more exhausting: your job or your kid?
[Laughs.] I'd say both challenge me, but I think my wife will tell you that parenthood is an extraordinary job, and it takes an extraordinary person to do it. That's one of the reasons why I think my wife is so amazing.

What's your ideal weekend off?
I don't have dreams about some exotic location. But on a Sunday afternoon, hanging out with my wife and son in our apartment is pretty much all I need.

Are you a big celebrity in Tonawanda?
[Laughs.] Umm… I don't know. But I love Tonawanda.

Is there a street named after you?
Not that I know of, but my family has an old farm near Attica, N.Y., and there was a Glor Road there. But I should clarify that that has absolutely nothing to do with me.

How do you stay unemotional covering something as horrific as the tsunami in Japan?
There are times when we see some pretty awful stuff. My job is to record and report what I see as best I can. But that is one of the most difficult things I do. Haiti's a perfect example. I saw things there that people shouldn't see. It was just heartbreaking.

Strangest story you ever had to do?
It was during the Olympics in China. We went to the marketplace and did a story on local cuisine. Within the space of half an hour, I ate bee, snake and centipede.

Is there a sex-tape scandal in your future?
I certainly hope not. You're more likely to see a really corny video of a father and son playing ball in the park.

Whose TV job do you want?
Mine! That question has come up before: Where do you want to be in five or 10 years? And I'd rather concentrate on the present.

What do you think of the guy who wrote the book about the four-hour work week?
Timothy Ferriss, right? He's an interesting guy. But I wouldn't want a four-hour work week. I like what I do. Why would I only want to do it four hours a week?

Do you own Anchorman on DVD?
[Laughs.] I have to look. I'm not sure. But I should. Brilliant movie.

Sweetest assignment you've ever gotten?
It's always a treat to cover the Olympics, because they're at that intersection of sports and politics, and there are so many different stories that come from them. Plus, the chance to travel to a different country is great.

How are the Olympic swag bags?
I think only the athletes get them, but we wouldn't be allowed to keep them anyway. ✖✖✖

GLASS ACTS

SOMEBODY ONCE SAID, "The hard part about being a bartender is figuring out who's drunk and who's just stupid."

Untrue. Almost everything about being a bartender is hard, from remembering large orders to dealing with annoying customers to smiling when someone orders the 20th mojito of the night. Then there are the odd hours, the incessant standing, and the physical and mental exertion involved in acting like what one wag described as "essentially a pharmacist with a limited inventory." In short, bartending is a calling. And for the greats of the profession, it's a noble one.

It's to them that we dedicate this issue. As always, in assembling our list, we relied heavily upon readers' suggestions. Then we blended that with some of our own expertise, added a jigger of fresh reporting and presto! The Improper Bostonian's Most Beloved Bartenders, Class of 2011.

Please visit these charming gentlemen and ladies at their watering holes, which range from neighborhood pubs to hotel bars and clubs. And check out their signature-drink recipes at improper.com. Then you can join us in toasting the finest cocktail artists on the Charles.

↔CURRENT CRAZE: Our demographic changes depending on the act we have, so it could be all white wine and Cosmos one night, PBR and Narragansett the next, and then all "strong islands" and Kamikazes.

↔DRINK OF CHOICE: Currently, a Rittenhouse Sazerac.

↔BAR SNACK OF CHOICE: Hoisin hog wings from Local 149 in Southie.

↔HAVE A RABBI, A PRIEST AND AN ALLIGATOR EVER WALKED INTO YOUR BAR? We celebrate all walks of life.

↔SOUNDTRACK OF YOUR BAR: This calendar year alone, we've had John Brown's Body, Robert Plant, Trey Anastasio, George Clinton, Queens of the Stone Age, the Pogues, Robert Randolph and Gogol Bordello. I got to see Bruce Springsteen play with the Dropkick Murphys!

↔BEST TIP STORY: A few years ago at the House of Blues San Diego, Tenacious D was playing. One of the production guys on tour with them was drinking at my bar before the show. I said how big a Jack Black fan I am, and I bought him a couple of shots. Sure enough, after the show, he comes back with a plastic bag and says, "Thanks for the shots." Inside the bag was the T-shirt Jack Black wore on stage that night! It has a giant dragon blowing smoke and fire, and it was soaked with sweat, but I didn't care. I wrung the sweat out into a vial and wore it around my neck for a year. Just kidding.

↔BEST DRUNK CUSTOMER STORY: Also in San Diego, a friend tried to drink as much Rumpleminz as he could. Wouldn't you know it, he had to abandon his underwear in the men's room.

↔NEXT BAR TREND: Circus bears on stools. Mark my word.

↔PLACE FOR A NIGHT OFF: I like to spend as much time as possible with my family. If I do go out, I like to try new places. Basho in the Fenway is a favorite.

↔DRINK OF CHOICE: Brut Champagne, and I'm always down to try a spin on any Champagne cocktail.

↔BAR SNACK OF CHOICE: Raw oysters, and depending on my mood, a New Zealand sauvignon blanc or glass of bubbly

↔HAVE A RABBI, A PRIEST AND AN ALLIGATOR EVER WALKED INTO YOUR BAR? That's a normal Saturday night.

↔HOW DO YOU KEEP THEM HAPPY? Drinks for the rabbi and the priest, and I throw some of chef's veal sliders at the alligator.

↔RECOMMENDED FOOTWEAR: Dansko clogs (patent leather, of course).

↔FAVORITE INGREDIENT: I love making my own organic fruit purees.

↔BEST TIP STORY: This wasn't at Liberty, but right before I left to study abroad in Italy, a very disappointed MLB player sat at my bar. I didn't expect much from a Yankee, but he ended up leaving me enough to cover my first shopping expedition in Florence.

↔NEXT BAR TREND: Reinventing what a bar is by connecting guests with an unrelated experience like art, fashion, music.

↔PET PEEVE: After serving someone, being told who's next. It's my bar. I know who's next.

↔PLACE FOR A NIGHT OFF: Tremont 647, Noche and then usually out to a club.

↔DRINKING ON THE JOB? Only to test for "quality purposes."

↔HOW HAS COCKTAIL CULTURE CHANGED? People are intrigued by unfamiliar ingredients and more apt to let you create something for them on a whim. This has led to some fantastic recipes (Knob Creek, maple syrup, sweet vermouth and Aperol), as well as a few disastrous ones (Tabasco, olive juice, red pepper flakes and vodka).

↔CURRENT CRAZE: Sidecars, gimlets and older classic cocktails like Negronis, Vespers, Champagne cocktails, Aviations.

↔ALL-TIME FAVORITE BARTENDER: I've always had an eye on Rob Botelho, who works the gay nightclub circuit in town. Although he's always two or three people deep at the bar, his smile is genuine, and the upbeat attitude never fades.

↔DRINK OF CHOICE: Jack Daniel's on the rocks.

↔BAR SNACK OF CHOICE: Any kind of pâté, rillette, confit or cured meat with a nice, funky French red.

↔MOST UNDERUTILIZED INGREDIENT: Dessert wines.

↔BEST TIP STORY: I was working on Long Island, and we were four or five deep at the bar. The soda gun had no bubbles. My bar-back didn't know how to change it; the cash drawer was stuck shut; and a guy orders a dirty martini, asking if we have blue-cheese-stuffed olives. Meanwhile, I was serving vodka and Red Bull out of plastic cups. I poured his drink, and one ice cube fell in the glass. Before I could even spoon it out, the guy said, "You need to learn how to make a martini. There isn't supposed to be ice in it." I looked him in the eye and threw his drink into the trash. The regular sitting at the bar handed me a hundred dollar bill.

↔NEXT DRINK TREND: Sangrias and punches (it's patio season!).

↔CURRENT CRAZE: The cocktail I seem to make the most is the mojito.

↔BAR SNACK OF CHOICE: Swedish Fish, white-chocolate pretzels or Reese's Peanut Butter Cups.

↔MOST UNDERUTILIZED INGREDIENT: Agave nectar.

↔FAVORITE INGREDIENT TO PUT INTO A DRINK: Liquor. Kidding! There's a new drink called Berry Good on the menu that we use blueberry juice for, and it tastes amazing!

↔THING CUSTOMERS NEVER SEE: There's a lot of math involved.

↔BEST DRUNK CUSTOMER STORY: There was one time this guy came in and started drinking Booker's on the rocks, which is over 120-proof. He then explained evolutionary biology on a bar napkin.

↔NEXT DRINK TREND: Flavored vodkas geared toward college kids: cotton candy, root beer or the new Mountain Dew flavor.

↔PET PEEVE: When people order one drink and then close their tab, and then five minutes later do it again.

↔HDW HAS CDCKTAIL CULTURE CHANGED? Back in Austin, Texas, where I worked for 16 years, people trended to lighter, refreshing cocktails. Boston seems to have edgier tastes.

↔CURRENT CRAZE: Vodka still wins out, but bourbons and whiskeys seem to be gaining ground.

↔DRINK DF CHDICE: Usually, I stick with vodka, but when I'm at home (since I don't often find it around town), I like to pull a bottle of Tuaca out of my freezer.

↔BAR SDUNDTRACK: We have a jukebox, so it changes with the crowd. I like that. It keeps things interesting.

↔FAVDRITE INGREDIENT: I like to put a little dark beer in my frozen margaritas. It mellows the sourness just a little and gives some great depth of flavor.

↔BEST TIP STORY: A lot of young people made a lot of money in Austin during the dot-com boom. It was a regular occurrence for them to wad up hundreds and use them to shoot baskets into my tip jar. Those were the days.

↔NEXT DRINK TREND: Bourbons are already doing well, and lots of my friends are really getting into gin now.

↔ALL-TIME FAVORITE BARTENOER: A few of my favorites are Mike LaPeruta, Adam Cutone, Phung Luu and Leo Riley.

↔DRINK OF CHOICE: I love brown booze—7 and 7's, Crown Royal and ginger ale, or the occasional Manhattan (no bitters, please).

↔BAR SNACK OF CHOICE: Truffle fries with a classy beer like High Life or PBR.

↔HAVE A RABBI, A PRIEST ANO AN ALLIGATOR EVER WALKEO INTO YOUR BAR? No. But Adam LaRoche, Traci Bingham and a woman with severe Tourette's have. Those were interesting nights.

↔RECOMMENOEO FOOTWEAR: Black Skechers with no laces. Super comfy.

↔FAVORITE INGREOIENT: Maple bitters. Weird, but it works well in whiskey.

↔BEST TIP STORY: This really angry guy came in and ordered some kind of Manhattan. He was nasty, rude and very short with me. He pounded the drink, looked me in the eye and said it was the best Manhattan he'd had in a while. Then he dropped $500.

↔BEST ORUNK CUSTOMER STORY: On a slower Monday night, a guy came in who seemed shy and was just hanging by himself, drinking vodka and sodas. About an hour later, he stood up, took his pants off, screamed "F America!" and left the bar. The good news was that his pants had enough money to pay his tab.

↔HAVE A RABBI, A PRIEST AND AN ALLIGATOR EVER WALKEO INTO YOUR BAR? I don't judge...

↔FAVORITE DRINK INGREOIENT: That's like asking an accountant what his favorite number is. I do get excited when beautiful, fresh, in-season mint comes in, though.

↔MARTINI PHILOSOPHY: Stop being scared of vermouth! It's delicious!

↔NEXT DRINK TRENO: Chilling out about the cocktail. It's just a beverage.

↔ALL-TIME FAVORITE BARTENOER: My husband, Kam Guilmet, of 94 Mass Ave. He's the fastest bartender I've ever seen.

↔DRINK OF CHOICE: If it's whiskey, I like it.

↔BAR SNACK OF CHOICE: A cheese plate with Glenmorangie Nectar O'or—a Scotch aged in Sauternes casks. It's heavenly.

↔MOST UNDER-APPRECIATEO INGREDIENT: Ice really makes a huge difference in a cocktail. The right kind of ice cube can keep your drink cold without watering it down. The wrong kind of ice cube will turn your drink dull and dilute it.

↔FAVORITE INGREOIENT: Minute Maid Enhanced Flavored Pomegranate Tea. You can get it in the refrigerated juice aisle. It's so well-balanced—not too sweet, not too tangy and very refreshing.

↔MARTINI PHILOSOPHY: If you don't want a drink with dry vermouth, then don't order a martini. Instead, order a "vodka or gin, up with a twist or an olive."

THE DRUNKEN HANDS OF FATE

BY MATT NANNIS

One man's "bespoke" cocktail may be another man's poison. To test how different bartenders interpret a vague request, I visited three bars known for customized beverages, placing the same order in each. The results—from Drink, Bergamot and Highland Kitchen—were telling.

"I'd like something with bourbon and bitters, but steer clear of Manhattans," I told the bartender at Drink. The result was a Vieux Carré. Originally from New Orleans, this weighty cocktail tasted heavy on rye and vermouth. Bitters rounded it out, making it reminiscent of a Sazerac, but without the caramel nip. "Let's mix it up for the next one," I said. "I want something fruity that wouldn't embarrass me on a date." The resulting gimlet was a humble pour of Hendrick's Gin, fresh lime juice and a splash of soda water over crushed ice. The citrus overpowered any hints of rosemary and cucumber from the Hendrick's, while the aftertaste of the Vieux Carré swallowed the lime. Something to remember next time I try and make a smart order.

Next, I visted Somerville's Bergamot. My first round, requested in exactly the same words as at Drink, brought an Elizabetta: Old Weller Antique bourbon, Amaro Nonino and Cynar given a lengthy stir and poured over a single cube in a chilled lowball, garnished with an enormous orange twist. The sweet Old Weller and bitter Amaro connected as pleasantly as the leads in a John Hughes romantic comedy. My second order produced a Blood and Sand, named for the 1922 Rudolph Valentino film. Made of equal parts Scotch, sweet vermouth, cherry brandy and orange juice, it was lightly smokier and fruitier than its predecessor—an excellent complement.

Last, I visited Highland Kitchen, a typical neighborhood tavern if your tavern is run by star chef Mark Romano. My first order brought a Red Hook: Old Overholt Rye, Punt e Mes, Luxardo Maraschino liqueur and a touch of orange zest. It toyed with being a Manhattan, but the Punt e Mes' bitterness was bold enough to make it distinct. My final order netted me a B-Side Lounge classic, the Rarely Eagle. Combining Eagle Rare bourbon, St-Germain, lemon juice, orange flower water and simple syrup over crushed ice, it melded solidity and balance with an intense sweetness. A pleasant nightcap to round out my tasting menu.

↔HOW HAS COCKTAIL CULTURE CHANGED? For most of us at Deep Ellum, classic cocktails have been a distinct interest for years. I think despite the changing trends, we just keep doing what we do.

↔CURRENT CRAZE: Some people drink whatever their parents drank, or whatever their friends drink, or whatever they drank the last time they went out. Others never want to have the same thing twice. Everyone else wants Cynar.

↔DRINK OF CHOICE: Domestic lager paired with rye whiskey.

↔BAR SNACK OF CHOICE: Hungry Mother's country ham and biscuits. They'll gladly pair it with a No. 99 cocktail.

↔IF A RABBI, A PRIEST AND AN ALLIGATOR WALKED INTO YOUR BAR, WHAT WOULD YOU DO? Ask two of them for proper ID and call animal control about the other.

↔BAR SOUNDTRACK: Everything from old country and R&B to power pop and punk rock. It all depends on what's going on in the room.

↔FAVORITE INGREDIENT TO PUT IN A DRINK: Water.

↔HOW TO DEAL WITH CLINGY CUSTOMERS: I asked her out three years ago, and now we live together.

↔NEXT DRINK TREND: Mocktails.

↔PET PEEVE: Tearing up coasters at the bar. But I'm as guilty of this as anyone.

↔THING CUSTOMERS NEVER SEE: My amazing Victoria's Secret push-up bra. OK, some have seen it.

↔BEST TIP STORY: An older, highly respected academic from a nearby university gave me a porn novel. But I do love getting books and chocolate, so please don't let this dissuade you.

↔BEST DRUNK CUSTOMER STORY: I've got a drunk couple in the woman's bathroom, a drunk ex-con and an unattended baby, at 1 a.m. on a Monday night. How did this become my life?

↔NEXT BAR TREND: Tiki bars. I have my grass skirt and shell bra ready to go.

↔HAVE A RABBI, A PRIEST AND AN ALLIGATOR EVER WALKEO INTO YOUR BAR? Not yet, but a Red Sox, a Yankee and a Bruin did one night... and wouldn't you like to know how that ended?

↔FAVORITE INGREOIENT TO PUT IN A ORINK: Fruit accents are delicious and belong in every cocktail.

↔HOW TO DEAL WITH CLINGY CUSTOMERS: I'll talk, listen to your stories, comment on the latest sports event and even look at pictures of your dog, but when the bill comes, you need to add another 50 percent to that tip, because I'm not on the menu, and next time won't be so fun.

↔BEST TIP STORY: Last Thursday a tipsy, sloppy man in a business suit sits at my bar and asks for a tall White Russian. I tell him I only have small dark Italians and smile. I give him a glass of chocolate milk on the rocks. He says it's the best White Russian he's ever had, puts $100 on the bar and leaves.

↔PET PEEVE: Just ask. It's so annoying when the solo guy lingers at the bar. I can tell he's mustering up the nerve to ask me out. I can see him tearing his napkin into a million pieces. I can hear the hesitation in his voice when I ask if he wants another drink. But what he really wants is my number, which, when he does finally ask, he won't get. So just ask. And then smile when I give you another beer instead. P.S. Leaving a big tip makes you memorable.

↔BEST WAY TO GET HER ATTENTION: Look me in the eye and smile. Nothing is sexier than a confident man.

JESSE DUPUIS

WOODWARD AT AMES HOTEL, 1 COURT ST., BOSTON (617-979-8200) WOODWARD ATAMES.COM

↔BY DAY: Certified as a personal trainer and trains on days off. I've also started bartending private events.

↔ORINKING ON THE JOB? Never, except to straw a drink to make sure it's on point.

↔CURRENT CRAZE: My favorite is a request to "Make me something." After a couple of questions about the flavors they like, I get to play.

↔ORINK OF CHOICE: Depends on my mood. Bulleit Manhattan, up, Black Label, rocks, dark beer, pinot noir.

↔BAR SOUNOTRACK: I've championed "Pony" by Ginuwine as the bar song.

↔THING CUSTOMERS NEVER SEE: Our problems. The guest is there to have a good time. We may be tired, stressed or severely hung over, but the best of us will never show it.

↔BEST TIP STORY: I waited on a couple of guys at brunch who invited me out to a dinner they were hosting at a restaurant that night. I showed up to a seven-course meal paired with wine and some very interesting company. I still have my copy of the menu. It's not always about money.

↔MARTINI PHILOSOPHY: I drink vodka dirty and straight up, so I'm forced to say there's room for interpretation.

↔NEXT ORINK TREND: I'd like to see a bigger move towards micro-gastronomy in cocktails.

↔PET PEEVE: Guys whose style of flirting make the women at my bar uncomfortable. I see way too much of it.

CANDACE MARIE SMITH

GRILL 23 & BAR, 161 BERKELEY ST., BOSTON (617-542-2255) GRILL23.COM

↔ORINKING ON THE JOB? Absolutely not. You have to be on your game at all times at Grill 23, more so than at any other restaurant where I've worked.

↔CURRENT CRAZE: Our guests' requests are pretty straightforward—a martini, up, cold and either olives or a twist.

↔ALL-TIME FAVORITE BARTENDER: I'm going to give a shout-out to Chad Fox at the Franklin Cafe.

↔BAR SNACK OF CHOICE: Chips. Ours are amazing.

↔BEST TIP STORY: Working a slow Tuesday shift, back in the day at Excelsior. A guy walks in and says that a regular of mine sent him in to see me. He starts handing me rolled-up hundreds about every 30 minutes. By his third drink, he asks me what the most I've ever made in a single shift is. He says, "Well, we're going to beat that." He tipped me $1,100 in totall

↔NEXT ORINK TRENO: I hope this never actually becomes a trend, but meat drinks. For some reason, people really want to put bacon in everything.

Dry, fruity and lightly spiced. But that's just the first sip.

Honestly, I'd be a perfect fit for TLC's What Not to Wear.

I'm pretty boring from 9–5, so a lot of students will see me outside of class and go, "Miss Betsi?"

I love reinventing my style. [It's] Lady Gaga meets Audrey Hepburn meets Agyness Deyn meets Carrie Bradshaw meets Betsi Graves.

I think it's sad that somewhere along the road we lose our childhood sense of play with clothes. Who says we need to stop playing with our clothes?

I love quirky accessories, throwbacks to the '20s and '80s, colorful tutus and hand-stitched garb.

I work closely with our fashion designers to come up with designs that'll enhance the artistry of the choreography. Sometimes I design the costumes myself.

This skirt is a shellacked prom dress. It reminds me of a human paper doll. It's by Chromat, an independent store based in New York City.

I'm currently in a not-so-secret love affair with my Lucchese boots.

I'm a huge fan of Etsy.com and love supporting other artists who push the limits of what we're supposed to wear.

Life of Reilly

PASSAGE TO INDIE

NOW IN ITS NINTH YEAR, the Independent Film Festival Boston returns as an antidote to multiplex cliché. Still buzzing from Sundance and South by Southwest are flicks like John C. Reilly's Terri (pictured) and Miranda July's latest opus, The Future. But the real highlights are the documentaries. For music lovers, there are films about Le Tigre, Morphine and the Replacements. For foodies, there's one on Spain's famed El Bulli restaurant. For the literate, there's a study of The New York Times. And for pop culturalists, you can learn everything you ever wanted to know about Conan O'Brien or the guy who plays Elmo.

The Buck Stops Here

Total Eclipse of the Son Small-town lives begin to spiral into dark-comic disaster after a prank involving a fake deer leaves gay brothers without their dad. Stephen Karam's Sons of the Prophet, playing through May 1 at the Boston Center for the Arts, is steeped in religious undertones, balancing laughs with questions of mortality and faith. But you won't question the cast, which features Tony Award–winner Joanna Gleason. Kathleen Godbold

The Adjustment Bureau ★★ Based on a short story by Philip K. Dick, whose brain-twisting existential malaise has already influenced films like Blade Runner and Minority Report, The Adjustment Bureau stars Matt Damon as David Norris, a cocky young politician. In the men's room rehearsing his concession speech, he meets a blowsy party-crasher played by Emily Blunt, kicking off a delightful back-and-forth of screwball banter. These crazy kids belong together, but the science-fiction plot says otherwise. Enter the Adjustment Bureau, a collection of awesome character actors in fedoras bumping into people and causing so-called coincidences. Answering to somebody who's supposed to maybe be God, they work like trenchcoat-clad angels, taking orders from memos delivered in faded manila envelopes. Their superpowers are arbitrary and depend on the whims of the plot, which is all just an excuse for more classically Dick-ish debates on predetermination versus free will. Apparently magic fedoras allow access through secret doorways that teleport you across entire city blocks. But you know who's really good in this movie? Matt Damon. (At the Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

Certified Copy ★★★★ They're strangers at first. He's a writer touring Tuscany, played by William Shimell, an opera singer making his film debut. She's a hot mess, flighty and transplanted from somewhere in France, played by Juliette Binoche in a fearless performance. She upstages his reading and drags him out afterward for an afternoon of relentless conversation. The two eventually take a drive, waxing and waning at great length about life and all its imponderables. And then something happens. A barista mistakes them for a married couple. She decides to play along. So does He. Suddenly, with no warning to the audience, they're airing marital grievances and bitter, long-buried resentments. Writer/director Abbas Kiarostami jolts you into considering deep, dark questions. As time passes and people age, are you presenting a false self to those you claim to love? Maybe the entire idea of marriage is just another way of preserving a replica of the person you were when you got hitched... a certified copy, perhaps? (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Hall Pass ★ ½ The Farrelly Brothers' decade-long wallow in irrelevance continues with this sad spectacle, which stars Owen Wilson and Jason Sudeikis as a couple of dorky suburbanites granted a week's vacation from the vows of marriage by their exasperated better halves. The problem that has plagued every Farrelly movie since their twin triumphs—Kingpin and There's Something About Mary—is that the copious gross-outs feel obligatory. The brothers have been self-consciously trying to outdo the hair-gel joke since 1998, getting bigger and ruder while simultaneously neglecting the construction that made those set-pieces the stuff of legend. Shot like a sitcom, with unconvincing Georgia locations standing in for Rhode Island and the Cape, this garishly overlit film lacks any semblance of real human behavior. Outlandish flights of profanity reek of flopsweat, as if the brothers know they've been eclipsed by Judd Apatow but assume that by throwing enough pee-pee and poo-poo at the screen they might catch up. What use is spraying diarrhea all over a wall if you don't follow it up with a punch line? (In the suburbs.)

Hanna ★★ ½ Director Joe Wright's bombastic junk-food thriller stars Atonement's Saoirse Ronan as a genetically engineered super-soldier trained in the wilderness by her rogue-agent father (Eric Bana) to hunt and kill in sync with the Chemical Brothers' throbbing electronic soundtrack. Cate Blanchett wins the Melissa Leo award for most egregious overacting as the honey-accented C.I.A. honcho aching to neutralize the young Hanna. The results sometimes feel like a tweener Bourne movie and sometimes like an art-house Kick-Ass, minus the logic but with plenty more ostentatious camera acrobatics. Wright has always been a bit of a show-off in the director's chair, and he doesn't skimp on Hanna's goofy visual flourishes. The camera spins upside down and back again, often for no reason. It's violent, propulsive and sometimes very silly. The question of whether or not you're laughing with the film—or at it—looms large over the quasi-tragic final reel. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Happythankyoumoreplease ★★ Languishing on the shelf since its Sundance premiere last year, How I Met Your Mother star Josh Radnor's debut feature is an instantly forgettable romantic comedy in the wannabe–Woody Allen mold. It's the kind of generic indie we see dozens of times

GIVING A DAM

Life imitates art in Mel Gibson's latest.

The Beaver ★★½
Starring Mel Gibson, Jodie Foster, Anton Yelchin, Jennifer Lawrence. Written by Kyle Killen. Directed by Jodie Foster. Opens May 6 at Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

IT SHOULD COME AS NO surprise to hear that Mel Gibson has issues.

That's what has always made him such a vital performer. He spent two decades atop Hollywood's A-list, delivering countless searing performances that teetered on the brink of madness. Despite his matinee-idol looks and easy charm, there's always been something dangerous about him, like Clooney with a drinking problem and a temper. Gibson's darker impulses invested the first few Lethal Weapons with a tragic desperation. Can you think of any other action hero who could've played Hamlet? His most recent directorial efforts, The Passion of the Christ and Apocolypto, are overwrought with horrific imagery that comes from somewhere private and primal.

Last summer's tabloid voicemail debacle portrayed the actor as a drunken, racist maniac, and made Gibson psychoanalyses a national pastime. In fact, it's presumably only due to the sudden, annoying ubiquity of the even more crass and crazy Charlie Sheen that we're finally witnessing the long-delayed release of Jodie Foster's third directorial effort, The Beaver. A low-budget labor of love for the actress, the film grapples sincerely with mental illness within a patently absurd context. It doesn't quite work, but it provides something of a cinematic exorcism for the public's increasingly conflicted relationship with Gibson. It also gives a platform for one of his most indelible performances.

Gibson stars as Walter Black, a clinically depressed basket case who's heir to a toy manufacturing fortune. Not to mince words, but Gibson is aging poorly. It's a shock to see the former hunk looking so rumpled and weary. Walter drifts through the film's early segments in a sad-eyed haze, barely registering when he's kicked out by his devoted wife (Foster) and shunned by his two sons (Anton Yelchin and Riley Thomas Stewart).

After a comically disastrous suicide attempt, Walter discovers a beat-up beaver puppet in the garbage. Wearing it on his hand, he spontaneously concocts a radical form of therapy in which he'll only communicate through the beaver, which just so happens to snarl in a combination of Mel's long-lost Aussie accent and the cadence of Gibson's Edge of Darkness costar Ray Winstone. It's a depressive's dream, the chance to start everything all over again with a new, unaccountable identity. The beaver is brash, charming and likable—everything that Walter Black is not.

It's tough to overstate the precision of Gibson's performance here, speaking the vast majority of his dialogue in a goofy voice and moving his hand like Jim Henson, simultaneously conveying with his eyes the ineffable sadness of the broken man behind the puppet. Foster does what she can at the helm to assist, using a variety of tricky shallow-focus strategies to visually normalize this kooky scenario, but her role onscreen sadly remains that of a cipher. She plays an audience surrogate with no identity of her own, and even Foster's God-gifted knack for generating instant empathy and goodwill can't overcome the paper-thin characterization of Kyle Killen's script.

As Walter, via the puppet, gradually works his way back into his estranged family's good graces, the film gets hung up on a potentially fatal detour, with son Porter (Yelchin) earning a small fortune for himself penning term papers for his classmates. A hottie cheerleader (Oscar-nominee Jennifer Lawrence) wants him to write her valedictorian speech, and their awkward courtship feels like a constant interruption from a lesser movie.

Meanwhile, faster than you can say "transference," the beaver puppet becomes a media sensation. This tantalizing story thread, complete with guest spots from Jon Stewart and NPR's Terry Gross, is unfortunately relegated to a montage sequence, a recurring problem that plagues The Beaver. Running a scant 88 minutes and over-reliant on Marcelo Zarvos' syrupy score, the movie is hesitant to let scenes play out in their entirety. It feels heavily edited and fussed over.

A shame, because Foster comes to a gutsy conclusion, and the later scenes in which Walter realizes that he's become his own worst enemy ring with a meta-cathartic resonance, even before he starts beating the crap out of himself. What's impressively tough-minded about The Beaver is its ardent insistence that there are no quick fixes and easy outs. Summed up rather inelegantly in a lecture to the camera by Lawrence's secretly grieving cheerleader: Sometimes things just aren't going to be OK. Sometimes people you love get sick, and there's nothing you can do about it. Sometimes they die. The only way to move forward is learning how to live with that.

This should be common sense, but it's positively startling to hear from a Hollywood movie. Such good intentions, plus a stunning Gibson performance, go a long way toward damming up The Beaver's obvious flaws. ✖✖✖ each year, crosscutting between three couples with middling relationship problems and little at stake in an anachronistically affordable Manhattan. Radnor headlines as a struggling short-story writer, who predictably turns out to be just like every other boozy chick-magnet with commitment issues that actors-turned-filmmakers always pen for themselves to play. Competently photographed in widescreen, Happythankyoumoreplease is at best polished and pleasant, running familiar riffs on material that was already stale back when Edward Burns was rehashing it 15 years ago. Lacking a fresh sensibility or any hint of an edge, Radnor dutifully unfurls the indie-rock montage sequences, wrapping up all his storylines with predictable little bows and no acknowledgement of a world outside these beautiful people's solipsistic navel-gazing. (At the Embassy Cinema.)

Jane Eyre ★★ There have been at least 12 big-screen adaptations of Charlotte Brontë's 1847 novel, as well as another dozen or so made for TV. Is there anything more we can gain from yet another couple hours with Jane and Mr. Rochester? Director Cary Joji Fukunaga's take is respectful, for the most part adequate and, as far as I can see, has no compelling reason to exist. Fukunaga attempts to shake up the text with some rough-hewn naturalism, fixating on the Derbyshire landscapes and overplaying the miserable weather. The shots are handheld and often underexposed, announcing from the outset that this isn't your mom's Jane Eyre. Except it really is. Once you look past the shaky-cameras and ugly costumes, there's nothing new. Luckily, Michael Fassbender is there to liven things up as the moody Rochester. Wearing unfortunate, pubic-looking sideburns, this wry Irish actor plays up the character's lazy contempt for everyone in his company. But Mia Wasikowska's Jane just blandly stands around, suffering from Fukunaga's ugly natural lighting and deliberately drab color scheme. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Limitless ★★ ½ During any other era, Bradley Cooper's entitled frat-boy smarminess would've stranded him in villain roles. Lucky for him, we live in a post-Kardashian, "winning" America, so Cooper's cheerfully amoral swagger can carry the day in an odd duck like Limitless, wherein the hero's fundamental shallowness is all part of the fun. Playing a bedraggled novelist, Cooper's brazen opportunist happens upon an experimental drug that increases the subject's brainpower tenfold. Naturally, he parlays this superheroic ability into a career of Wall Street plundering and a lifestyle of Manhattan luxury. The strained thriller machinations wear thin over time—and I'm still not exactly sure how that murder plot exactly plays out—but director Neil Burger polishes this turd to a very fine sheen (no pun intended) that's visually intoxicating. Slick and as guiltily pleasurable as a reality show, Limitless has no interest in pondering consequences or ethics. It's an adrenaline rush, as charming and vacant as the movie's own front man. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Paul ★★ Simon Pegg and Nick Frost's Shaun of the Dead did a remarkable job inserting two goofball slackers into the margins of a zombie apocalypse. It was a tricky send-up that did everything right that their latest, Paul, does wrong. Now starring as a couple of sheltered fanboys looking for UFOs on their way home from Comic-Con, Pegg and Frost (who also cowrote the script) happen upon an actual alien—one that smokes a lot of weed and sounds suspiciously like Seth Rogen. The ensuing road trip is a rather deadening laundry list of nerdy pop-cultural references, mostly content to restage sequences from classic 1980s sci-fi films. Repeating famous catchphrases and posing in familiar settings, these boys have mistaken references for jokes. Director Greg Mottola, who most recently helmed the marvelous Adventureland, has little capacity for broad farce, with gifted comedic performers like Jason Bateman, Bill Hader and Kristen Wiig salvaging stray laughs despite the inconsistent tone. The barrage of in-jokes attempts to flatter the audience, but familiarity breeds contempt. (In the suburbs.)

Potiche ★★ ½ This minor diversion from writer/director François Ozon seems conceived mainly as a love letter to his iconic leading lady, Catherine Deneuve. Based on a musty 1970s play by Pierre Barillet and Jean-Pierre Grédy, the film stars Deneuve as a desperate housewife turning a blind eye to her umbrella-tycoon husband's incessant philandering. Everything changes when hubby (a weaselly Fabrice Luchini) is taken hostage by striking workers. Deneuve's Suzanne steps in as CEO to handle the union negotiations and, as it turns out, the old gal's got a knack for business. Ozon eats up the 1977 setting, wallowing in the gauzy colors and tacky fashions, without ever quite committing to the strident women's lib speeches in the original script. He seems more interested in figuring out how many Umbrellas of Cherbourg references he can make, and in indulging Deneuve's seldom-used crack comic timing. Potiche dithers here and yon, with a deliberately dated tinny score and retro camera movements that annoy just as often as they delight. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Scream 4 ★★ ½ In this age of Saw sequels and torture porn, the teen slasher flicks parodied by the snarky late-'90s Scream franchise can't help but feel quaint, which is sort of the point of this belated fourth installment. A long 10 years after the third film, original cast members Neve Campbell, Courteney Cox and David Arquette return to Woodsboro and find a new generation of middling actresses stupidly running up flights of stairs, as a pop-culture-savvy serial killer seeks to "remake" the original picture according to the new rules of Hollywood's incessant reboots. It's a nifty hook that writer Kevin Williamson hasn't quite gotten a handle on, and director Wes Craven seems awfully rusty staging these repetitive stabbings. But then the final third of the movie veers into something rather extraordinary, piling on meta-twists and actively insulting the target audience to the point where you expect the now middle-aged original cast to just tell all these damn kids to get off their lawn. The anger is bracing, and endearing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Source Code ★★★ A man (Jake Gyllenhaal) wakes up without his memory on a Chicago commuter train to find a hot fellow passenger (Michelle Monaghan) is being overtly friendly. There's also the unsettling reality that someone else's face is staring back at him in the bathroom mirror. Then the whole damn train explodes. Quickly plunged back to a frosty control bunker, video-linked to an even chillier commanding officer (Vera Farmiga), Gyllenhaal's shell-shocked war vet discovers that—thanks to the brain's capacity to retain information after death (plus a quantum physics equation to be named later)—a secret military forensic operation has allowed him to mind-meld with a civilian victim and witness a terrorist attack that took place hours before. What follows is Groundhog Day meets Speed, a star-crossed love story unfolding in eight-minute couplets. Paced like a rocket and unfolding perilously close to real time, Source Code creates a maze in which we want the hero to solve the mystery and save the girl from a tragedy that has already occurred. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sucker Punch ★ Already a box-office bomb of epic proportions, director Zack Snyder's creepy ode to scantily-clad female empowerment plays like the tumescent dream of a deeply stunted little boy. Emily Browning stars as Babydoll, a fiery kid condemned to an old-school insane asylum and scheduled for a lobotomy by her leering, abusive stepfather. As a coping mechanism, the relentlessly objectified starlet escapes into a fantasy world where she leads an uprising at a skanky bordello. I'm not sure why a molested child would seek escape from her conditions by imagining herself as a high-priced whore, but Snyder's film only gets weirder and more offensive from there. Every time these girls (including Abbie Cornish and Jena Malone) exhibit any sort of sexuality, Sucker Punch jumps to another

Lovers Feud

Takin' It to the Streets Everybody knows Tony and Maria's tale of tragic love, but how many of us have seen West Side Story's dancing knife fights on the big screen? Playing May 7–14 at ArtsEmerson, familiar songs like "Tonight" and "I Feel Pretty" evoke plenty of nostalgia and sentiment. And if you're jonesing for more synchronized snapping, Broadway Across America brings the musical to the Colonial Theatre beginning June 14.

Matt Nannis

meta-level of fantasy, where they fight dragons and robots during World War I. It's a dull series of protracted action sequences that feel like watching somebody else play a video game. Endless, sleazy and just plain wrong, this movie should only be seen by Snyder's therapist. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Win Win ★★★ Writer/director Thomas McCarthy, known for Sundance smashes like The Station Agent and The Visitor, doesn't have a lot of challenging ideas up his sleeve. As far as I can tell, he takes a gimmicky construct and casts it wisely, drawing out fresh performances from underused actors by playing to their strengths in endearing showcase roles. There really isn't anything wrong with the formula. McCarthy's latest stars Paul Giamatti as a schlubby high school coach who accidentally ends up being foster-father to a solemn wrestling prodigy with abandonment issues. Ethical knots abound, paying lip service to troubled times in recession-addled New Jersey, but Win Win truly takes flight whenever it becomes a true underdog sports movie—scoring big laughs from simple three-shots of Giamatti, Jeffrey Tambor and the never-not-funny Bobby Cannavale as beleaguered coaches of the worst wrestling team in the Garden State. McCarthy doesn't ever get a handle on his tale's courtroom histrionics, but the lovable characters and genre payoffs make it a pleasure nonetheless. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Your Highness ★★★ In the not-so-grand tradition of Krull, The Beastmaster and a hundred other schlocky early '80s sword-and-sorcery epics, director David Gordon Green's goofy, eerily specific homage to a genre perhaps best forgotten opened to a hyperbolic critical spanking. I laughed; sue me. Star Danny McBride (who also cowrote the script) plays his patented mulleted lout, this time a ne'er-do-well prince overshadowed by his dashing older brother (James Franco). The spiteful siblings embark on a quest to rescue Franco's virgin bride (Zooey Deschanel) from an evil sorcerer (Justin Theroux), and Your Highness' one comic twist is that all the characters speak with hoity-toity accents in a filthy, anachronistic vernacular. It's a one-joke premise, but, strangely enough, the movie actually works as a rousing medieval adventure, full of chintzy, retro special effects, imaginative set-pieces and even a pedophile puppet. I'm almost embarrassed to admit how much I got caught up in the story. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

BACK IN THE HABIT

The Feelies return with a recognizable sound and fresh indie-rock delights.

The Feelies play the Middle East Downstairs on May 14.

Fumie Ishi

FAMILIAR LAYERS BUILD part by part. First the strummed guitars, then a serpentine bass hook and finally the percussive pulse locking into jangly momentum and capped with a deadpan croon.

"Is it too late, to do it again, or should we wait another 10?" Feelies lead guitarist Glenn Mercer sings. "Nobody knows, everyone cares, everyone's asking, for answers to prayers."

It's actually been 20 years since the Feelies' last album. But fans' prayers have been answered with Here Before, which sounds much like the Feelies did in the '80s, when the New Jersey band inspired R.E.M. and a slew of indie-rockers to come.

It's not like the Feelies ever overplayed their matter-of-fact formula. The band issued its debut, Crazy Rhythms, in 1980, only to sour on the music business and wait until 1986 to release follow-up The Good Earth, coproduced by R.E.M.'s Peter Buck.

After two more albums in the next five years, the group came to a halt. Coguitarist Bill Million moved his family to Florida and landed a computer-security job at Disney World. It was an abrupt move in keeping with the Feelies' unstable path, which included limited touring, often around holidays.

"For us, it's a part-time thing," Mercer says from his home in North Haledon, N.J. "We never looked at it like a career."

After Million left, band members simply moved on to different music projects (including Wake Ooloo and Speed the Plough), just as they did between previous albums. Mercer hadn't spoken with Million for nearly a decade when he called him around 2002 to discuss licensing requests, and the two remained in touch.

The eventual licensing of songs for Turner Broadcasting and Volvo ads proved a lucrative outlet for the dormant group. "It just seemed the more time that went on, the higher the profile, even though we weren't playing," Mercer says. And in 2008, when kindred spirits Sonic Youth asked if the Feelies would open a July 4 show at New York's Battery Park, the quintet finally reunited.

Million still travels from Florida and bassist Brenda Sauter lives in Pennsylvania, but the band continues to convene for East Coast shows, including a few in Boston. "I guess we're a little too accessible now," jokes Mercer, whose group returns to the Middle East Downstairs on May 14, but this time with a new album.

"It's something we had talked about right from the beginning, that we did want to do a new record and take it out of the realm of nostalgia," the singer/guitarist says. "Although we're OK with that element, we just don't want it to be the main focus."

Here Before offers relaxed, folky downshifts, like the sauntering "Morning Comes" and the lightly psychedelic title track. "We wanted a record that can hit you on different levels," he says. But edgy rave-ups like "Time Is Right" still ride the metronomic jab of drummer Stan Demeski and percussionist Dave Weckerman, who favors maracas, tambourine and blocks over cymbals.

> "It just seemed the more time that went on, the higher the profile, even though we weren't playing."

"We kind of felt the frequencies of the cymbals were interfering with the guitars," Mercer recalls of the band's early decisions. "When we started taking the cymbal parts out, we noticed that the space would be better filled with some percussion parts."

That minimalist template from Crazy Rhythms echoed Brian Eno's '70s pop, but the Feelies' primary influences were the Velvet Underground and the Stooges. Mercer is used to the Lou Reed comparison when it comes to his low vocals, but he says, "I'm actually surprised that no one has mentioned Iggy [Pop]."

It all goes back to Mercer's early attraction to the Beatles, the Rolling Stones and the Who, as well. "It doesn't seem like it's out of the realm of possibility for you being able to play something like that," he says. "That's the one element that influenced me was the simplicity and the emotion behind it." ***

Phase Change

Set the Hook Formed in 2001 at the University of Rhode Island, Badfish sought to keep the signature sound of Sublime alive after the death of frontman Brad Nowell. Its repertoire surfs ska- and reggae-influenced sounds over waves of punk. Taking its name from a Sublime song that repeats, "Ain't got no time to get old," Badfish gives the '90s tunes a current sound. Now celebrating a decade of catchy riffs, catch the trio's 10th anniversary show at the Wilbur Theatre on April 29. Casey Prusher

Turning Tables

Taking a Spin iPods, beware. Vinyl has returned to the scene in a unique audio-turned-visual foray, as artists from around the world experiment with LPs. Amid the characteristic scratches, pops and skips of a record player, they've found both a retro groove and a modern twist. The results are in the The Record: Contemporary Art and Vinyl, a show that examines the influence of vinyl LPs on modern culture and explores the intertwining histories of music and contemporary art. See and hear the beauty of obsolescence at the Institute of Contemporary Art through Sept. 15.

PUT A BID ON IT

Everyone's a Critic

It's always astonishing what MassArt manages to scare up for its annual auction. This year, my personal favorites were the Cindy Sherman tea set (donated by the Barbara Krakow Gallery) and the "Die-Pod," whichs looks like a '50s-horror-movie poster showing a woman sitting by a tombstone with iPod controls superimposed on its surface (created by Class of '03's Nick Rodrigues).

Among those inspecting and speculating on the art, or simply schmying around at the gala preview party, were the auction's patron twins, Paul and Wes Karger, and their respective beauty queens, Pamela Vargas and Ashley Bickford, collector and connoisseur Allison Salke, boho hipster Zach Lanoue, brunette beauty Sondra Levenson and her husband, Norman, the quintessentially cute Marty Dykas, the unfortunately heterosexual Matt Greer, wee slip of a jewelry designer Brelyn Spindel and her main squeeze, Mark Andrus, who's interesting career path has included working as a therapist, making a fortune off pita chips and now developing real estate.

The evening's funniest remark: Regarding a photo of three poodles, one guest said, "Personally, I prefer those paintings of dogs playing poker."

Food, Glorious Food

Community Servings' big simkhe, LifeSavor, began, as per usual, with a lavish cocktail party at the Langham Hotel, where everyone who's anyone socialized like mad and then went out to the city's top restaurants for dinner. But not before bidding on silent-auction items.

One prize was an evening on the town with me, and I'm proud to say that I went for more than tickets to a horse show. More importantly, there was the possibility of having at least a few words with such lovable types as dual citizens of Boston and Bangkok Oedipus and Amy, the absurdly charming Jack Ribakoff with the absurdly gorgeous Jennifer Kim, girlfriend of a future FedEx CEO Alana Hagarty, hipsters of the North Shore horsey set Haskell and Alison Crocker, the chronically delightful Bonnie Berger, the criminally blue-eyed Rob Gravis, his handsome other half, John Milligan, crazy-cat-lady trapped in a gay man's body Shawn McBride and his translator, Daron Manoogian, tall drink of water

Marty Dykas and Matt Greer at MassArt's auction

The "Die-Pod" at MassArt's auction

I'm an auction item at Community Servings' party.

Kier McDonough and Anja Kola at Commonwealth Shakespeare's gala

Priscilla Douglas at Commonwealth Shakespeare's gala

Deitrich Falkenthal, suaveness personified, Serge Denis, the mayor himself, Tom Menino, smoking hotness Ben Perkins, and I could go on and on.

In return for getting auctioned off like livestock (did I mention that I went for more than a horse show?), I was awarded dinner at Lucca Back Bay with the thoroughly agreeable likes of latter-day Dorian Gray Andrew Rogal and his exquisite young thing, Rachel Gilson, and über-groover Laura DeLuca (aka DJ D-Lux), along with her man, Adam Wheeler. As for the guy who won an evening with me: Are you sure you wouldn't rather go to a horse show?

I have absolutely no memory of how it ended, but I woke up in my own bed the next morning without any jet lag, but une peu de gueule de bois.

Sacre Coeur!

Short of hopping a flight to Paris (which means dealing with jet lag and Parisians), you couldn't imagine a more Moulin Rouge–ish evening than Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's Soirée à Paris, held at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston.

A mime (yes, you read that correctly) greeted guests, and during the cocktail hour, some plein-air painting was done indoors by someone impersonating Georges Seurat, while can-can girls and hot guys (one thing Paris does have) worked the crowd. This included new board members Sam Mazzarelli, John Raftery and Bryan Simmons, luscious minx Marisa Greenwald and her handsome brother, Michael, gazillionaire former lieutenant governor Kerry Healey and her husband, Sean, hunk o' burnin' interior designer Michael Ferzoco, and someone whose false mustache made the rounds of several tables.

Like a real night in Paris, I have absolutely no memory of how it ended, but apparently it did, because I woke up in my own bed the next morning, without any jet lag, but une peu de gueule de bois. ✖✖✖

The IMPROPER

Darling Buds of May

Let me go on the record to state that I do not, in fact, spend my winters lying in a crystal sarcophagus, dreaming of the arrival of Cthulhu. I spend them like everybody else: bitching about my free choice to live in New England. This past winter was particularly savage on us furless mammals. There was more shoveling than at a White House press conference. I grew tired of stepping on penguins. The sight of iced coffee made me cry.

But snows melt, beak lacerations heal and sap erupts out of plants in an obvious metaphor. We're now traipsing into the broad, sunlit uplands of a Boston spring. When we step outdoors, we're no longer eaten by Yetis. Instead, we blink dully in the unaccustomed glare, take notice of Housman's cherry trees and remember that life ought to be enjoyed, not merely tolerated while we flip through the channels for something better. It's in May, not in January's death grip, that we ought to make resolutions. So in a spirit of renewal, this summer I resolve to:

A) Favor locally sourced, sustainable ingredients in my editor's letters.

B) Cancel my plans to annex Panama.

C) Stop telling everyone that small-plates menus cause cancer.

D) Floss.

And so shall peace and goodwill come to pass. Oh, and the weird sarcophagus thing? Yeah, that's Soroff.

HIGH GLASS

SPRINGTIME in Nantucket, when the hydrangeas pop in pinks and blues by sandy beaches, and pristine smiles are stained purple with Bordeaux. For the 15th year, winemakers, chefs and oenophiles gather for the Nantucket Wine Festival, offering tastings, dinners and seminars May 18–22. Rest assured, a boat slip off the Rope Walk isn't a prerequisite for entry. "There definitely is a collegial atmosphere," says festival founder and "busboy" Denis Toner. "There's so much that you can do that the temptation is to do too much, but you really want to remember this event. You can look at it as graduate school." NICK ALTSCHULLER

In a quiet corner of East Boston, Pupusería Mama Blanca serves snack food for locals and foodies alike. House-made corn dough is smacked into flat discs, stuffed with rich pork rinds or chicken, stretchy queso and creamy refried beans, then griddled until crisp. Whether you're a cuisine geek or just looking for lunch, take note: A perfect picnic spot—with perhaps the best view of the Boston skyline—is just a short walk away at Piers Park.

Al fresco food on the Rose Kennedy Greenway now packs more punch than the whiff of fish wafting from the Haymarket stalls. This year, when the city doubled the number of Greenway vendors from six to 12, it opened a world of possibility. One that includes grilled brie with local Asian pear on Iggy's bread.

GREEN MEANS GO

TO THE GUY IN THE GRAY BUSINESS SUIT: It was a typically packed Friday night on the Green Line. I got on at Arlington, and I'd like to extend my "sincere" thanks for the awkward dry-humping. Sure, we were crammed in, butt cheeks to naughty bits, and the train was lurching and swaying like crazy, but your obvious enjoyment and rigid attention to balance was stimulating. You could've at least bought me dinner first.

Maybe I'll take a cab

To the job market:

I know one isn't supposed to toot one's own proverbial horn, but please forgive me: I'm an outgoing, personable, dedicated young professional with a master's degree. None of this seems to matter when looking for a job. The "American Dream" is starting to seem more and more like just that… a dream. I've spent my time in the trenches of low-paying jobs for the experience they'd provide, with the promise of building my résumé, to no avail. What's it going to take to make it to the next phase? Ready for change

To a famous local clothing retail chain:

For a company that promotes customers as its top priority, you have a funny way of showing it. Who doesn't give consumers an e-mail address they can use to contact them? Wouldn't you rather hear about my concerns directly, instead of reading about my annoyance in a magazine? Even your service is cheap

JUDGE FOR YOURSELF

Another Legal Sea Foods outpost may not top the list of Boston's pressing needs, but doubters ought to check out the 20,000-square-foot leviathan that recently beached on Liberty Wharf. The triple-decker Legal Harborside is a new concept, but it's made familiar through nods to the brand's beginnings in Inman Square and to a few recognizable dishes. Each floor features a different design, menu and staff, ranging from upscale to laid-back.

The first-floor dining room is casual, with picnic tables in open-air seating and a small but well-stocked fish market that sells house-made soft-serve. A large open kitchen boasts a pizza oven—the first at a Legal restaurant—in which chef Rick Vellante crisps up dishes like smoked salmon pizza or stuffed quahogs. The decor is nostalgic for anyone who knows the history of the location, as wood reclaimed from the pilings that held Jimmy's Harborside constitutes the hardwood floor.

Upstairs, Vellante has created a more refined, focused menu. "It's more of a celebratory restaurant," says president/CEO Roger Berkowitz. "We're giving people something new to be excited about." Entrees will make use of ingredients like Dover sole and abalone, lesser-known proteins that excite the chef. "This is a whole new challenge for us," Vellante says. "I think people will be curious." He predicts guests will bounce between areas, stopping under the third floor bar's retractable glass roof to enjoy the dockside view. Bar veteran Patrick Sullivan's cocktails, like a white sangria, are light and don't compete with the often delicate dishes.

"We saw success at Legal C Bar and Legal Test Kitchen," Berkowitz adds. "At the end of the day, people judge with their feet." At four o'clock on a weekday, it's pretty crowded. KYLE WRIGHT

Trapper Keeper

The Right Stuffed

Prezza chef/owner Anthony Caturano is an avid huntsman and collector of taxidermied animals. He lives in Saugus with his wife.

Why taxidermy?

I did a lot of hunting with my father when I was a kid. As I grew up, I started going on bigger adventures out West. The animals are reminders of the trip.

Have you ever offended anyone with your collection?

I don't know if anyone's ever been offended, but people definitely react to it. I like to teach those who don't understand it about the conservation aspects of hunting. That's important to me.

Of all the hunting trips you've taken, which is your favorite?

I don't know if I have a favorite. I've been all over the world. I went to Scotland once to do a seven-day pheasant shoot with Princess Diana's brother. It was cool to stay in the old castles.

How does your sport impact the menu at Prezza?

It encourages me to think seasonally. I do lot of game in the fall.

Do you have a favorite animal in your collection?

I guess the grizzly bears are pretty cool. There's a big horned sheep from the Arctic Circle and a giant elk that I killed with a bow and arrow.

What are you favorite local hunting trails?

I don't do as much hunting in Massachusetts, but I still head up to New Hampshire to go wild turkey hunting.

Wine

BLANC CANVAS

Pinot blanc is an ideal springtime quaffer. What's appealing is the soft texture, intriguing earthiness and subtle spice on the finish. Think of this relatively obscure variety as a stylistic cross between unoaked chardonnay and pinot grigio. It's among a handful of wines that should immediately come to mind whenever you want a white without intense fruit or dazzling acidity.

While pinot bianco from Trentino in northern Italy holds great options, the French region of Alsace is a favorite source, with wines tending to be a bit milder in character. You can't go wrong with the following Alsatians, each a blind-tasting winner. Enjoy these estate-bottled wines with lighter fish and vegetable dishes, or just well-chilled in the late-afternoon sun.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

Alsace in a glass

✳ Willy Gisselbrecht Pinot Blanc 2009 ($13, Bauer Wines) Gisselbrecht is a domain that has remained in the same family for centuries, and their pinot blanc is a supple charmer, with fragrant spring apple and herb aromas. Fresh and peachy on the palate, its round texture finishes off with slightly bitter stone-fruit flavors. It's one of those delicious wines that doesn't take center stage, but provides harmony and balance.

✳ Léon Beyer Pinot Blanc 2009 ($18, Broadway Marketplace) Beyer is a family producer with a history of vineyard ownership dating back to 1580. Known as a gewürztraminer specialist, Beyer makes a delicate, light, stylish pinot blanc with faint aromas of toast, tobacco and apple. It's crisp, lean and dry in style, with a lingering, earthy finish. Beyer blends in significant quantities of Auxerrois, which imparts body.

✳ Domaines Schlumberger, Pinot Blanc "Les Princes Abbes" 2008 ($15, Brix) The Schlumberger property is undergoing a full transition to ultra-organic, biodynamic farming. This is a slightly richer expression of pinot blanc, featuring smoky, almost tropical aromas. Made with 70 percent Auxerrois, it's apple-like with a suggestion of lemon zest that balances the gentle pinot blanc fruit.

The Milkman Cometh

These days, the depressed state of dairy farms makes it hard not to see the glass as half-empty. Yet, a few operations are staying fresh by reviving home delivery. Milton-based Thatcher Farm, which currently sources milk from Hatchland Farm in New Hampshire, delivers half-gallon and quart-sized glass bottles (plus yogurt, cheese, juice and other provisions) to doorsteps from Brookline to Braintree. Nostalgia, in this case, means convenience. And it helps keep local farmers afloat. ELIZABETH BOMZE

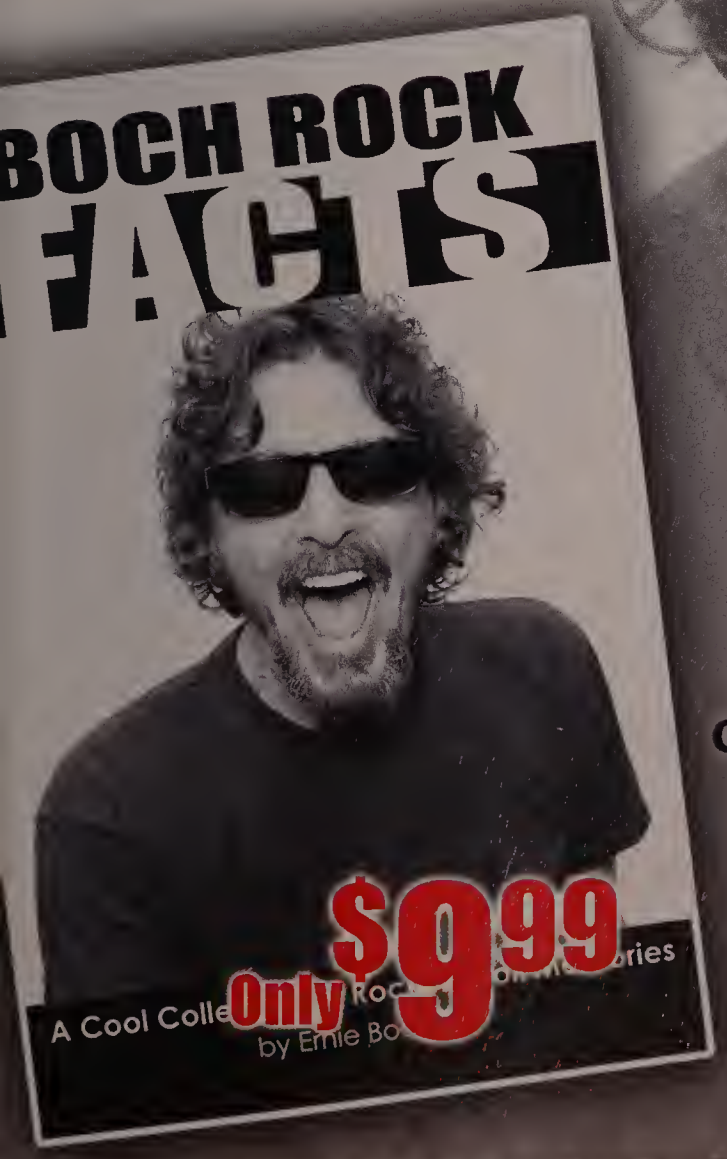
BLUE NOTES

Santos picks a name, already.

EVERYONE'S FAVORITE blue-hair is heading for the Greenway. After six years of wowing diners at Gargoyles on the Square, chef Jason Santos will open his own restaurant in June. During the day, he'll cater to office denizens with "a heavy concentration of burgers—but I don't want to call it a burger bar," complete with a lineup of liquid-nitrogen milk shakes in flavors like honey-dipped donut and butterscotch black truffle. Dinner, Santos says, will be "funky, creative American, but not too out there." The lunchtime science fare returns with a late-night menu.

As for the name, Santos had been wrestling with ideas. He ruled out calling it Santos—"Too ethnic, people will think it's tacos"—and only briefly considered the moniker Bluejay's, after his nickname. "It sounds kinda cheesy, like a diner," he says. "Besides, I'm 35 years old. How much longer can I rock blue hair?" After soliciting suggestions from Boston Herald readers, Santos settled on Blue Ink, which he changed to Blue Inc., citing his goal to branch out with sauces and rubs.

IN MEDIAS ROZ
Charlie Redd



OVER IN ROSLINDALE, chef Charlie Redd—formerly of Coda in the South End—has just opened Redd's in Rozzie, aka R 'n' R. The menu features unfussy dishes like chicken liver toast, baked Rhode Island fluke and rhubarb crisp.

CAROLYN JOHNSON, former chef de cuisine at Rialto, is heading the just opened 80 Thoreau in Concord. There's a familiar "new American" menu—local ingredients, French techniques—featuring dishes like pappardelle with braised veal.

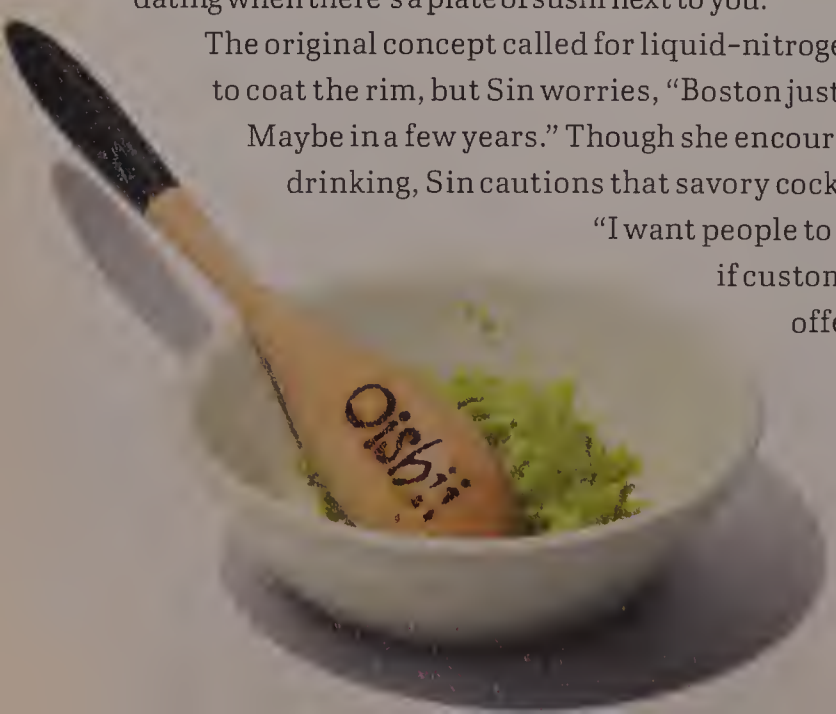
Drink of the Moment

Playing Koi



SOUTH END SUSHI SPOT Oishii isn't often thought of as a libation destination, but self-taught mixologist Jennifer Sin has built an extensive craft cocktail program. Her original recipes incorporate unexpected elements like spiced persimmon puree, liquid nitrogen and ice cubes washed in Laphroaig Scotch.

The menu's most unconventional entry is the savory and sharp OISHII PISCO ($12), combining pisco, sake, white citrus ponzu, egg whites and dollops of wasabi topped with an aged soy drizzle. Between the wasabi and soy, and sake adding a rice component, Sin describes the cocktail as "sushi in a glass."

Its complex flavors and textures bring something new to every sip. Salty soy rests on the frothy surface. Flavors brighten in the drink's lemony-citrus middle layer, brought on by vinegar- and lime-scented ponzu. Fresh wasabi, milder than its powdered counterpart, adds a spicy sharpness that builds as you drain the glass. Intending the cocktail to be enjoyed with food, Sin says, "The wasabi settled at the bottom is less intimidating when there's a plate of sushi next to you."

The original concept called for liquid-nitrogen–cooled flying-fish roe to coat the rim, but Sin worries, "Boston just isn't ready for that yet. Maybe in a few years." Though she encourages adventurous drinking, Sin cautions that savory cocktails aren't for everyone. "I want people to try them," she says. "But if customers don't like it, I'm not offended. I'll just make them a lychee martini instead."

LINDSEY CANANT

There's a route called the CRW-42 (stands for the Charles River Wheelmen). It starts in Newton and goes to Natick through beautiful horse country. You can be out among the pines and the farm country in a matter of an hour by bike. It's my favorite route because you get the sights and smells of the country while still in close proximity to the city—a little shot of nature and countryside in our busy, urban lives.

WHERE THERE'S A WILL

Effort may mean more than genetics.

IT'S EASY TO IMAGINE THAT our genes are immutable givens, making us Mozart, or not, from the start. We all know that nature holds hands with nurture, but David Shenk cites research that flips over old assumptions about genetic determination. He reports that those seemingly invulnerable dictators, our genes, are as adjustable as "knobs and switches" when they interact with our environment. And that the many things we do with "God-given" skills—play an instrument or practice basketball as relentlessly as Larry Bird did—contribute even more to success than innate talent.

The Genius in All Of Us—New Insights Into Genetics, Talent and IQ
David Shenk

Shenk is a graduate of Brown University.

Reading to children and spilling millions of words of positive encouragement over them increases their future success and can compensate for seemingly inborn shortcomings. Not doing so has the reverse effect. London taxi drivers who memorize the city's jumbled streets actually fatten up their hippocampi in the process. It's an example of nurture—heroic effort—influencing nature. As for children, their abilities or frailties are neither "a golden ticket or a locked gate."

Shenk promotes the power of will and discipline. And the many studies that have debunked old assumptions put success in our own hands. ×××

FROM PAGE 107: "The reality of GxE (Genetics times Environment) assures that each person's genes interact with his climate, altitude, culture, meals, language, customs and spirituality—everything—to produce unique life trajectories.... A seven- or 14- or 28-year old outfitted with a certain height, shape, muscle-fiber proportion, and so on is not that way merely because of genetic instruction."

COURT JEST

Discovering Justice, an organization dedicated to teaching students about the judicial system, celebrated its 10th anniversary on March 23. The Fairmont Copley Plaza hosted a dinner, an awards ceremony and an address by Gov. Deval Patrick in memory of the late Honorable Judge Reginald Lindsay. Some 450 guests attended and raised $440,000.

On April 2, the "FUNraiser at the Big Apple Circus" at City Hall Plaza benefited Boston Children's Museum. Some 1,700 guests watched an exhibition of the current production featuring celebrity ringmaster Henry Winkler. Later, 150 museum supporters bid on items presented by Jimmy Tingle. The event raised $200,000.

A multitude of small plates and big flavors make Tico stand out.

HOT SPOT Brussels sprouts tangle with bacon, kumquats, mint and jalapeños.

IN ANY DISCUSSION OF prominent Boston chefs, Michael Schlow inevitably comes up. Radius, his flagship in the financial district, has been a destination ever since it opened a dozen years ago. His Via Matta at Park Plaza and Alta Strada in Wellesley make respectable showings in the upscale Italian category. Granted, last year his Great Bay in Kenmore Square fell victim to economic instability and a general lethargy from the dining public, but he's come roaring back with what may be his most stimulating, satisfying and all-around enjoyable restaurant.

Tico occupies the former Cottonwood Cafe, at the corner of Berkeley and St. James streets. A lively bar area hosts a nightly scene to be seen, while the main dining room puts on more casual airs, with bare tables dressed only with dish towels for napkins. From a compact open kitchen, small plates are assembled in front of hungry spectators at a seven-stool counter.

In three visits, I grazed over 20 of the more than 50 items on Tico's inviting menu. I first tackled the skewered a la plancha offerings. A trifecta of bacon cubes ($6) combined delectable richness with the sweetness of charred onion and the bite of mustard, while three meatballs ($5) in a smoky tomato sauce bespoke comfort food with attitude.

Tacos arrived two to an order. With authentic Mexican flavor, the soft corn tortillas would merit a visit by themselves. Their fillings came in an inspired variety. Bacon, cabbage and green-tomato tacos ($9) replicated the flavor of the skewered bacon with the welcome addition of a fresh tomato tang. Tender pork tacos($9) included spicy cucumber for refreshing taste and texture counterpoints.

On one night, our party of four ordered a slew of small plates, which arrived in waves. A symphony of exquisite tastes ensued, with each dish momentarily becoming our favorite, until the empty plate was whisked away and replaced by a delicious successor. Brussels sprouts with bacon, kumquats, mint and jalapeños ($8) exemplified the bold, imaginative vision of the kitchen. The combination of muted bitterness, vibrant citrus and smoky-salty savoriness of these diverse components created a harmonious, memorable dish. Gigante beans with chorizo and green onion ($10) suggested Mexican cassoulet, while the shredded cabbage salad ($6) with crushed almonds and salsa verde offered delicacy and nuance. The flavor of roasted cauliflower ($7) was complemented by creamy chipotle and crunchy fava beans, while "creamed" corn ($8) joined a sweet, salty, smoky, spicy mix of bacon, chile and Thai basil. Taking a moment to revert to what we feared could be a cliché, we ordered the mushroom and cheese quesadilla ($10). Bathed in black truffle salsa, it was to a typical Tex-Mex quesadilla what Don Giovanni is to "Mary Had a Little Lamb."

Of the mains, while the roast chicken ($22), seared branzino ($26) and pork confit ($24) were each expertly prepared, the star was a shellfish casserole ($22) with crunchy Gulf shrimp, toasted vermicelli and saffron aioli. Its combination of flavors made it a standout. Desserts ($10 each) included decent chocolate and lemon tarts, and a marvelous bread pudding. For wine, good pairings can be found in Argentina, including Ruta malbec ($35) and a rosé of Malbec from Crios de Susana Balbos ($36). Service varied from excellent to satisfactory, but it could benefit from more seasoning, coordination and oversight. A request for another round of the fabulous tortillas left us waiting in vain.

While Tico isn't cheap, it does provide value. The flavors are so big and bold that dishes deliver out of proportion to their size. In terms of pure enjoyment per calorie, the restaurant is without peer. ✖✖✖

FEELING LOSS

Turns out, shedding pounds isn't easy.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

THE MOST I'VE EVER weighed was 195 pounds. That was during the summer after my freshman year of college. I learned the harsh reality of the Freshman 15 when I caught a glance at my reflection and realized that I looked like a pregnant lady with chest hair. Horrified, I intensified my workout habits and knocked that number back down to around 185, where it remained for years afterward. Until the other day, when, in a fit of unfortunate self-awareness, I decided to weigh myself and discovered that I'd set a new high score. One that begins with a "2."

There are lots of explanations for this. Did you know that when a scale tells you that you weigh more than you expected it's because angels are sitting on your shoulders? That's what my mom says. OK, not really—my mom doesn't believe in God. Just kidding. Maybe she does. She says Grace a lot, but mainly when she's talking about her favorite actress, Grace Jones. What? No, I'm not trying to change the subject.

I spent a moment on the scale staring in disbelief and simmering with outrage over this transparent conspiracy. "Of course this scale weighs heavy," I thought. "The gym wants you to think you're fat so you keep renewing your membership." Then I realized that the gym was going to extraordinary lengths to rig not only its scales, but its mirrors. Amazing what some people will do for a buck.

Eventually, I came to terms with the fact that I'm on my way to being one of those people the evening news films from the neck down waddling around a food court during a segment called "Food Courts Filled With Record Number of Losers." So the question is: What do I do about it? My wife, Heather, says I should just eat less, but that's crazy talk. She's into all that holistic hippie stuff, like salads and not eating after you're already full. But dieting like that can start a yo-yo effect. Look at Heather—she's skinny now, but 10 months ago she had this big stomach on her. Her sister's even worse. She's also skinny, but she's ballooned on three different occasions. Now she eats healthy stuff to set a good example for her three kids.

Think that's funny? Send unbiased e-mails to ezra@improper.com.

Rather than diet modification, I've decided to try reshaping my exercise habits. In the past 24 hours I ran seven miles, and half of that occurred before the unholy hour of 7 am. That's when Heather works out, and I've realized that I have a much better chance of exercising if someone else is sharing the pain. I'm sure she appreciates my company. Instead of a solitary run at daybreak, maybe listening to some music and thinking about her plans for the day ahead, she gets to spend 40 minutes listening to grunting, burping, complaining and worse. I bet she's pretty excited that I've synced up our routines.

She's into all that holistic hippie stuff, like salads and not eating after you're already full.

If extra doses of exercise don't immediately show results, I'm willing to consider the nuclear option: P90X. If you haven't heard about P90X, it's an easy daily routine to help you get in shape. All you need is an hour and a half a day and the willpower to bring your heart to the brink of explosion.

I'm amazed that P90X has caught on the way it has here in the nation of lipo, seven-minute abs and ephedrine pills. America loves shortcuts, and P90X is essentially the opposite of that—"Hey, wanna get in shape? Well, instead of working out for an hour a day, how about working out really hard for an hour and a half? After just three months of excruciating torture, you'll have the body you dreamed of—if you survive!"

None of my friends have made it to Day 90 of the program, not for lack of willpower but for lack of a spare 90 minutes. I suspect that the satisfied customers in the P90X infomercials are all hobos, because who else has the time? No, you cannot have 50 cents for the bus. Not until you tell me how you got those massive lats.

All I know is that I'd better get this situation reversed, because a new study just found a link between weight and brain function. The heavier you get, the more you impair your cognitive abilities. Apparently, it has something to do with metabolism, whatever that is. Me not know this word. Me hungry! Obama no born America! Durrr!

Or I could just get a second opinion. Which is to say, try a different scale. So that's exactly what I did. And scale number two had a more optimistic outlook: 190 pounds. Just like that, I'm two-thirds of the way back to my target weight. Now I just have to figure out what to do about these mirrors. ×××

QUITE CONTRARY

Investing advice for interesting times

IT SOMETIMES AMAZES ME that financial literacy is so poor in America, particularly among young adults. So, periodically, it strikes me that I should point out some universal market truths. The number-one thing you should know about investing is that it's a highly emotional business ruled by two opposing forces: greed and fear. I believe that big moves in the stock market are 80 percent dominated by emotion and 20 percent by the reality of conditions. A few recent examples: When the British Petroleum rig exploded in the Gulf of Mexico, the stock plummeted from about $60 to $27. It was an emotionally charged issue, and rumors of bankruptcy for BP echoed widely. But once the tragedy was off the front pages, the stock rallied to $46. The sell-off had been exaggerated by emotions and media frenzy. After the tragic earthquake in Japan, big market sell-offs occurred again. Two weeks later, Japanese stocks bounced back, and a few commentators even talked about how the resulting potential for change created bullish markets. Again, emotions ruled and created bargains.

As a contrarian, I've learned through many years of investing to try to bet against the popular mood, be it intensely fearful or intensely greedy. Yes, we'll see greed again, as difficult as it is for even smart people to believe. Because, despite the last three difficult years, the world has not eliminated cycles. Sooner or later, anxiety and fear will be replaced by optimism and enthusiasm. Never say never.

So how do you operate intelligently in both fearful and greedy times with your investments?

Don't be afraid to bet against the crowd. Most people around you, friends and family included, will try to discourage you from entrepreneurial adventures. "Now's a terrible time to start a new business," you'll hear. "Why would you ever think of taking another job now?" And, "Money in stocks when the world is falling apart? Are you nuts?" The world has been falling apart for thousands of years. And for lots of folks, it's never a good time to start a business. You have to screen out the noise, the media and well-meaning advice, and bet on your own instincts. Years ago, I was interviewing for writing jobs in

Hollywood. In half a dozen meetings, all the people I met said the same thing: "Kid, you don't wanna go through what I did to get where I am. Do yourself a favor—go home and go into the family business." I find that most successful people giving advice never quite believe that we have the fire in our bellies to make it the way they did. So screen out the naysayers, if you have a dream.

As for investments, if you're a contrarian, fluctuations in stock prices can give you a chance to accumulate cheap assets. In the early 1990s, for example, a major local bank collapsed, and every other financial institution, it seemed, plunged to single-digit prices. Fear dominated. The biggest Boston bank sold at $3 a share, with dire rumors circulating. If you had dared to buy this stock at $3, three years later it had tripled to $9 or so, a fine gain. But, if you had waited two more years, the shares rose to over $100 and split. To take advantage of the market, though, you have do your homework and stay disciplined. And when contrarian plays start to come into favor, they almost always go much higher than even smart people predict. Don't get off the train too soon. Don't sell the stock when it suddenly appears that former dogs have become pedigreed pets.

Greed, and greedy markets, are equally difficult to assess. A prime example of this was the Internet bubble at the beginning of this century. There was a frenzy to own anything ending in .com. People were calling to tell me, "These companies can sell at $100s per share. At $1,000s, even. It's the new economy." They believed it. The public clamored for the Internet stocks. But the greedy clincher was the folks who called and said, "My neighbors are getting rich. What are you doing for me lately?"

"What do the companies do that are making them rich?" I'd ask.

"I don't know. They're Internet companies." Most of this ended in tears when the bubble burst. Thousands of companies disappeared when the emperor was exposed without clothes. Or earnings. Or sales. People who had pointed out the madness of the frenzy had been hooted at, dismissed as cranks, behind the times. Crazes, fearful or greedy, almost always last longer than even smart people expect. So sell, or sell short, slowly, in stages, in times that are exuberant. And similarly, buy slowly and in stages when anxiety rules.

When someone asked one of the early Counts de Rothschild how he made so much money on the Paris Bourse, he supposedly said, "When the streets of Paris are running with blood... I buy."

What he meant was that when panic was in those streets, eventually there was money to be made. Cynical, perhaps. Realistic... oui. ×××

ON LACKEY, TA AND DREW BREES' MOLE

5 STORYLINES FOR MAY

HARD SLIDER Lackey may be on the upswing.

Deadline Disclaimer There won't be much on the Bruins or Celtics this week, as it's that time of year when the NBA and NHL playoffs make life hell for Take Five. As I type, the Bruins are up 3-0, the Celtics are down 2-0 and everything is topsy-turvy. It's our own little version of Face-Off. Two teams swapped identities and now all hell's breaking loose. Well, maybe not yet. But if I hear even one Ubuntu chant coming out of that Bruins locker room...

New Adventures of the Old Lackey I obviously had high hopes for the Sox this season, but John Lackey was one of the only guys* for whom my expectations were tempered. I didn't think he had it in him to succeed, and, honestly, I wasn't even sure if I wanted him to. He just seemed like kind of a jerk. But Lackey's rejuvenated in 2011. He's definitely bounced back. Wish I could say I told you so. (*Shout out to Dice-K. Thought you'd suck too, buddy!)

Yo QB, Let's Kick It! Short of something so horrific that I can't bear to even type it, Ryan Mallett will never start a game for the New England Patriots. He's no more Tom Brady's replacement than Kevin O'Connell was. He'll be gone long before Brady's ready to retire. But in the meantime, Mallett's Vanilla Ice act should be entertaining—especially when you don't have to worry about him playing.

No Luck Lockout If the impending NBA lockout is even half as painful as the NFL mess, then I might as well start tying the noose now. And truth be told, I'm terrified that it will be. Unlike in the NFL, some of the NBA owners actually are losing money. And while Roger Goodell may be arrogant, he's not as stubborn, or anywhere near as ruthless, as Dictator Stern.

More Timmy Time He's getting up there in age, and his knees are almost shot, but... who cares? No one can change a playoff series quite like a hockey goalie, and the Bruins have the best in the business. They'll go as far as Tim Thomas takes them.

2 REALITY SHOW EPISODES

Tonight, on Hoarders... We take you into the basement of a man who's spent the last 10 years collecting NFL Draft picks. "Er, yeah, this one here's a real favorite of mine," he says, eyes barely visible under the hood of a dirty Bon Jovi sweatshirt. "This guy started as a sixth rounder back in 2003, but, er, you know, look at him now—a 2015 second rounder!"

And Tomorrow, on Celebrity Mole... An intimate sit-down interview with Drew Brees, one of the faces of the NFLPA's antitrust suit against the league.

3 Random Thoughts

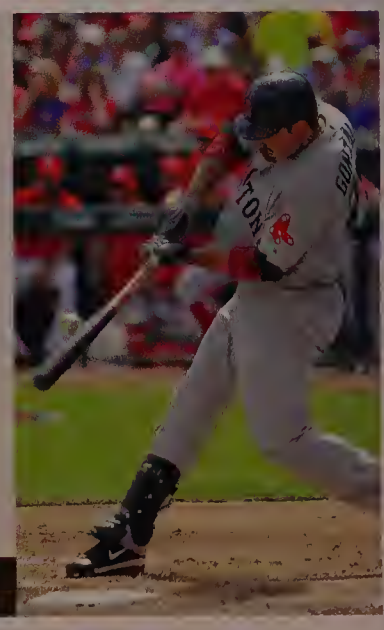
Straight Cash, Homegirl This may come as a shock, but I've never been much of an SEC women's basketball fan. Until now. Earlier this month, Randy Moss' daughter, one of the top high-school hoopsters in the country, committed to the University of Florida. And I have a new favorite team. (For at least the first half of the first game.)

Well-Deserved Erection We'll never know what took the city so long to move forward on a Bill Russell statue, but once the idea started to gain steam last fall (even the President gave his endorsement), it was only a matter of time. As to what the holdup was, you'll have to ask the mayor—and pray to God there's a translator handy.

Tony, Tony, Tony Naturally, I'm happy for all the success that Tony Allen's had in Memphis, but I'm a little torn. You ever start watching a TV show before it gets really popular, then everyone jumps in and ruins the fun? That's how I feel with Allen. All this fun everyone's having? We've been there since 2004.

1 ONE FUTURE BET

So what if it's been six years since the Pats won it all, and three years since they even won a playoff game—they're Super Bowl favorites. 7-1 odds, officially; same as the Packers. Unfortunately, that's irrelevant, as Rex Ryan already guaranteed a Jets title.



4 DATES TO WATCH

5/13: The Sox celebrate Friday the 13th with a visit to New York. In lieu of a ceremonial first pitch, Bartolo Colon will devour a litter of black cats.

5/16: If the Celtics and Heat go seven games, Game 7 will be tonight in Miami. Either way, the stadium will be empty.

5/19: Kevin Garnett turns 35, which probably makes you feel 75. (Unless you're actually 75. In which case, thanks for reading, Shaq.)

5/20: The Red Sox and Cubs used to be roommates in baseball purgatory. Now, Boston's living in the penthouse and will host Chicago for an awkward weekend visit. Should be fun!

Chances Are You've Been Sitting on a Cure for Cancer

Before Lance, even before LeMond, raised cycling awareness in America, it was the Pan-Mass Challenge that implanted the "a-thon" into this nation's consciousness. Since 1980, the PMC has raised $303 million for Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. This summer, more than 5,000 PMC cyclists will raise $34 million, 100 percent of which will go to cancer research and treatment.

“Chubby little Ashley.
She’s harmless.
She’s no threat to Halle Berry.”

Soroff On ASHLEY WILLIAMS

The TV and film actress talks about crazy theater people, body image and cockroaches in ice cream.

ACTRESS ASHLEY WILLIAMS, 32, was born and raised in Westchester County and studied acting at Boston University before joining the prestigious Williamstown Theater Festival. The sister of actress Kimberly Williams-Paisley, her TV credits include As the World Turns, How I Met Your Mother, Monk, Saving Grace, The New Adventures of Old Christine and Love Bites, among numerous others. In films, she starred opposite Kevin Spacey and Jeremy Irons in Margin Call, which premiered at Sundance this past winter, and currently stars alongside Kate Hudson in Something Borrowed. In addition to acting, she is a doula, or birthing coach. She lives in Los Angeles with her fiancé and several dogs.

Jonathan Soroff: Do people ever mistake you for your sister?
Ashley Williams: That would never happen. Have you met my sister? I'm the messy, larger, less organized version.

Favorite ensemble cast you ever worked with?
This may sound cheesy because I'm promoting this movie, but working with the cast of Something Borrowed was a dream come true.

Biggest audition nightmare?
There's so many. At this point, as soon as it starts to tank, the only thing going through my mind is, "OK, how many minutes away from having a glass of wine am I?" I had an audition the other day, and I was nervous, and the casting director said to me, "Do you have to pee?" It's just nonstop.

Biggest lie on your acting résumé?
For a while, on IMDB, it said I'd been on Dawson's Creek, which is a total lie. One true thing that should be on my résumé is that I'm allergic to horses, and yet I've been cast three times as "horseback riding girl." That meant I had to be doped up on Claritin the whole time and have no recollection of shooting.

Hardest thing to do: theater, TV or film?
Theater's the hardest because of the schedule. But if you're super, super famous, everything is a lot easier. For someone like me, it's all work.

Anything you'd like to erase from your credits?
I played a one-legged detective named Stump for a Lifetime movie of the week.

Worst job you ever had?
I was an ice cream scooper at one of those places in Boston for three years. It was the home of the famous mix-in's, and it had a little cockroach problem. So one time, I was mixing something into a woman's ice cream and a cockroach crawled up onto the bar, and I smashed it. I looked at the woman and said, "I'm so sorry."

Pretty grim.
I also got fired from the Bombay Company because I got "secret shopped" and I got a score of 11 out of 100. That's pretty pathetic, too.

Fantasy love scene partner?
Jack Black. I'm getting married in May, and my fiancé and I have our "hall pass" people, and mine's Jack Black. [Laughs.]

How many babies have you helped deliver?
About 35.

Any celebrities?
No. But I've taught childbirth education to celebrities.

Like?
Amy Adams. She's actually a friend.

Show you never miss on TV?
Top Chef.

If your life was a reality show, what would it be?
The Real Soon-to-Be-Wives of Producers With Too Many Dogs and Hobbies. I'm a doula. I'm an actress. I'm getting certified as a dog trainer. It's sort of a disaster.

Do you regret the plunging neckline you wore to the Lili Claire Foundation benefit?
Oh, yes, I do! That was bad! My boob is hanging out, and I can't get rid of those pictures!

You look great!
Yeah. My nipple looks good, too. [Laughs.]

Dream vacation?
For our honeymoon, we're going to backpack in Europe with a nice budget, as opposed to the measly one I had in college.

Weirdest thing you ever read about yourself?
I've read that I have an annoying face, and I think they might be right. Also, I'm a size 6, and it's kind of unusual for actresses who are working to be that big, so I get described as fat a lot. But I actually kind of feel like it's a badge of honor.

Doesn't it hurt your feelings?
No. It puts me back in the underdog position, which is what I want. Chubby little Ashley. She's harmless. She's no threat to Halle Berry.

Thing you liked most about being at B.U.?
Taking on odd personas. I was a crazy theater person, so I played into the weirdo stereotype and had a ball with it. I'd wear bathrobes and crazy hats. I played it to the hilt.

Weirdest fan encounter?
The soap opera fans were the best. They loved me! But on the flip side, there was the time I was being followed by paparazzi, and I was walking my dog, wearing curlers because I had an audition, and I was like, "You guys, come on!" And they said, "Nicole Richie's right behind you." So that was humiliating.

Your sister's married to country music star Brad Paisley. Do you listen to country?
I do now. And he has no choice but to watch me in bad movies of the week. [Laughs.] I think my brother-in-law's writing is really smart, and he puts on a great show. But when my sister said she was going to marry a country music star, we were like, "What? You voted for Dukakis."

She also dated Pete Sampras. Was he any good in bed?
I never slept with him!

If you were in a scandal, what would it be?
Something like, Ashley stole two grand from an old lady because she has to pay rent. ✖✖✖

Urban GROWTH

In Boston, farm-to-table doesn't have to leave your street.

BY NANCY GAINES
PHOTOGRAPHS BY KRISTIN TEIG

TO THE VICTORS IN THE SOIL
Community gardeners at work.

SWEETEST THING
Mike Graney's bees supply hundreds of pounds of honey per year.

In Fields Corner, Vietnamese immigrants plant Thai dragon chilis. In Mattapan, Haitians harvest mirliton fruit. In Codman Square, Sudanese gardeners cultivate sorrel. Bees are making honey on the banks of the Neponset, as chichens lay big blue eggs in Roxbury. There's a Boston Harbor island populated by Rhode Island Reds, and peppers, squash and tomatoes thrive in concrete containers four stories above Mass. Ave., on the roof of Boston Medical Center.

From East Boston to West Roxbury, a burgeoning urban agriculture movement has taken root. The Athens of America has morphed into a real-life Farmville that boasts more than 150 community gardens encompassing approximately 50 acres and 3,000 public-access plots tilled and tended by some 10,000 urban gardeners. Which doesn't even count the innumerable private backyard beds. With Mayor Thomas Menino proposing zoning changes to allow more urban farming, those numbers, all-time highs already, are poised to surge. At the current pace, it wouldn't be surprising to see cows grazing on Boston Common once again.

Urban agriculture offers an outdoor trifecta of sound economics, good food and exercise. Experts attribute the current wave to several sources—from the ongoing need to pinch pennies in a tough economy, to the ever-growing appetite for fresh, pesticide-free produce and poultry, to the relentless American pursuit of green. Indeed, a 2007 study showed that 200 pounds of crops can yield as much as $450 worth of produce, according to Valerie Burns, president of Boston Natural Areas Network (BNAN), which has overseen the city's community gardens for nearly a quarter century.

"We see spikes in gardening when economic times are tough," Burns says. "And there's much more attention to health. We used to see Miracle Gro in gardens—but not in years."

Boston farmers are a diverse bunch. Some are political refugees from hotspots like Somalia and the Congo. Working together with neighbors, native and new, can ease the immigrant experience. "We were hearing these people missed the connection with gardening and growing," Burns says. "We got them translators and got them into community gardens, and they were able to grow food they couldn't buy here."

Citywide, the farm movement is underwritten by roughly $5 million a year in grants and donations. But from small plots, like the ones ReVision Family Home (a shelter for homeless women and their families) has been plowing near Franklin Field for more than 20 years, a profitable, self-sustaining "new industry" is rapidly emerging, according to Dorchester entrepreneur Glynn Lloyd.

Lloyd's City Growers is an offshoot of his City Fresh Foods, which prepares and delivers ethnic-oriented meals for banks, schools and such. The new venture would grow the food he delivers. He envisions cultivating 10–15 acres of fallow city land, obtained for free, to reap $4,000 a week per acre's worth of produce during the 22-week growing season.

Jamie Lionette, former proprietor of a now defunct South End grocery that specialized in farm-fresh goods, is helping City Growers launch sales, which Lloyd says would also be to high-end restaurants and niche retailers. "Urban garden sales for profit are just coming on," says Steve Johnson, owner of Cambridge's Rendezvous, who lauds the trend.

Adds Lloyd, "It could be a million-dollar industry."

HARD BY THE FIELDS Corner T stop, a handsome aluminum fence encloses a quarter of an acre of prime open space between the venerable triple-deckers. There are 30 prepped plots, perhaps 12 feet by 16 feet each, of fecund dirt.

To Myhoang Nguyen, the space is a harbinger of tomatoes, peppers and okra to be tended by neighbors who pay a small fee ($10–$20 for water) and then are free to work the plots, eat the crops or sell them at a local farmers' market. Some of her clients from the Vietnamese-American Civic Association will be among them. Under the three-year-old Gardening Through Refugee Organizations (yes, GRO), at least 600 newcomers to Boston have found friends and acculturation in the program, run by BNAN.

The Vietnamese, says Nguyen, 25, who coordinates the Fields Corner aggies, have a hopeful eye this season on finally being able to produce rau muong, a type of spinach beloved at home but nigh impossible to grow here due to the cold. "But one woman did it," Nguyen says with a grin.

WHERE GRITTY Mattapan meets bucolic Milton, alongside the Neponset River that marks the southern boundary of the city, Mike Graney is one busy beekeeper.

From some 12 hives—essentially heavy wooden crates—he annually collects hundreds of pounds of honey from the surplus the bees don't consume. Each spring, Graney buys packages from New Hampshire containing a few thousand starter bees and one queen, which become a colony once she gets going, breeding more and more workers to keep the honey flowing.

"They use honey as their carbohydrates," says Graney, 38, a chef by trade, who raised the critters in Jamaica Plain for a decade before recently moving to Somerville. He sells to a few establishments but mainly gifts his honey to friends and family. If sold retail, his honey would go for at least $10 a jar, Graney estimates, due to its complex flavor profile from the unique flora in New England.

The bees buzz around within their quarters from around Mother's Day to mid-October, when they go dormant. Graney scrapes the honey off frames that look like air filters but serve as happy homes to the bees. For this, he dons a veil but no gloves. He's been stung "hundreds of times," he says with a shrug. "I work sunny days when they barely know I'm here," Graney explains, like a doting dad. "If it's cloudy, they get cranky." The bees communicate by pheromones, he explains. "If they think they're getting attacked they let off a smell. Like lemon."

DIGGING IT Jess Liborio oversees the Food Project.

IN RUBBER BOOTS THAT are more than a fashion statement, Jess Liborio plods through soggy plots to describe how some 18,000 pounds of peas, greens, beets, carrots and scores of other varieties of produce, plus ethnic treats like Jamaican callaloo, are extracted each season from the dozen or so community gardeners she oversees for the Food Project.

A Somerville native, Liborio, 32, started out as a teen with the project, which has helped city farmers for 20 years. In the three years she's held the title "urban grower," she's helped build 500 raised beds in Dorchester and Roxbury—and she expects to construct 200 more this year, replacing the soil in them so the plots avoid the contaminants that can plague city agriculture.

Ultimately, crops from the farm sites go to the farmers' market in Dudley Square or to relief organizations. Aside from its financial and nutritional benefits, farming is "such a social thing to do," says Liborio. "Neighbors stop by to ask what you're doing. Kids want to help. People want to get their hands dirty."

This summer, she'll also be supervising a new 10,000 square-foot greenhouse off Dudley Street where mentors will train new community gardeners who'll move on to tend plots elsewhere. "It's our garden incubator," she says.

SEEING RED

But Liborio's baby is the rooftop garden atop Boston Medical Center. Never mind that she has to lug all the compost, plants and tools around to the Northampton Street building and up the elevator to the fourth floor. The 6,000 square-foot windswept plaza is her special concrete jungle.

"I love it that, come summer, you can look up from Mass. Ave. right underneath us and see sunflowers and corn," she says.

'GARDEN GIRL" Patti Moreno is in her glory. It's still a blustery day in early spring but the chickens are laying, the seedlings sprouting, the plots plowed, the cuttings planted. A one-woman, multimedia agricultural impresario, Moreno, 39, turned to urban agriculture 12 years ago after her daughter was born. She and her husband, Robert Patton-Spruill, already had a filmmaking company, but she wanted to ditch the post-pregnancy pounds.

What began with an apple tree at their former home in Roxbury's Fort Hill, where birdsong competes with sirens, is now a permaculture surrounding their stately Colonial house. On one side of the three-quarter-acre site, once home to filmmaker Henry Hampton, 16 raised beds compose her "garden by cuisine," soon to be a show of the same name. Slated to air in 2012, the program is being distributed by the Boston-based American Public Television, she says, which develops programming for PBS.

Around the corner are the cutting garden, koi pond and berry bushes, fruit trees, onions, artichokes and the perennial garden. On what was a front porch is Moreno's climate-controlled breeding ground for hundreds of herb seedlings including quinoa and amaranth, grains widely touted these days for their healthful properties. By the door are 25 containers brimming with wannabe vegetables and flowers. Her family and friends consume nearly all the goods she harvests, Moreno says; some she sells at an occasional yard sale.

GREEN THUMB Filmmaker and gardener Patti Moreno

"Every section is another demonstration," she says, referring to her online how-to video series, "Garden Girl TV." Moreno also filmed 16 gardening videos for HGTV, produced three DVDs, cohosted a PBS show and publishes a magazine, Urban Sustainable Living.

Moreno's seven Araucana chickens (which lay blue eggs) used to have goats and rabbits for company, but she gave them away. Moreno also considered getting a rooster so she could breed chicks, "but I didn't want to be a nuisance," she says.

FOR THE RECORD, barnyard animals are banned in Boston (ditto Cambridge), but that doesn't mean they aren't there. Why the city isn't cracking down on rogue goats is unknown, but there seems to be a civic tolerance for livestock. At the mayor's urging, the Boston Redevelopment Authority is currently reviewing how to add a new use—urban agriculture—to property zoned as residential.

Meanwhile, Menino gets to play with the 44 Rhode Island Red hens on the Farm at Long Island Shelter, a pet project he ushered in last year. Under the aegis of the city Public Health Commission's Serving Ourselves program, the farm itself has been around since 1996, part of the city's large Long Island shelter for the homeless on the harbor island off Quincy.

"The mayor loves to come out and hang around here," says Corey Grier, the homeless services manager. "Even in times of budget cuts, the chickens are off the table. So to speak."

Not yet a year old, the Reds are proving productive, says farm manager Erica LaFountain, 28, cradling one of the hardy mahogany hens in her arms. "They used to be wary of people, but now they love to be petted."

Alongside the chicken pen are two and a half acres of growing space and four greenhouses where volunteers, students, shelter residents and kids from youth programs help tend crops including potatoes, tomatoes and peppers. The nearly 25,000 pounds of annual produce helps feed about 2,000 homeless people a day. Some is also sold at farmers' markets and to the 40 subscribers in its Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) project, where members pay $450 per season for a weekly share of the organic produce. Menino is expected to sign up. ×××

Matt Stein

Matt Stein, 31, was born to bike. His father cycled a marathon's distance every day, and his brother, Ken, is a hobbyist bike-builder in Las Vegas. So when he moved to Boston from North Carolina seven years ago, he naturally wanted to keep things rolling. "I had to get a whole new set of gear," says Stein, an "extreme cyclist." "The only weather I won't ride in is 33 and raining, so I had to adapt to conditions." The trick to cycling, he says, is making adjustments, not excuses. "After my open heart surgery, I was told that competing wasn't an option for me anymore. But it's like every other aspect of training around here: You find ways to go out there and do it. If you can make an excuse, you're just not that into it."

This being New England, weather is always a factor. "My second winter in Boston was when I first officially considered myself a cyclist. I think anyone who has ridden in Boston and is willing to go out again after their first winter here, you must consider them a cyclist."

Grayson Kimball

Long-distance running author Grayson Kimball, 38, strives to eradicate misconceptions about Boston runners. "People tell me they want to run, but that they have bad knees or this problem or that restriction—if you want to do it, then just show up and run." Grayson took up serious running about 10 years back, wanting to compete in a marathon. "I started running a few miles a day here and there; the mileage just kept adding up."

His strategies include hiding bottles of Powerade in the bushes along his route so he doesn't have to carry water. Another is to take his iPod along for the ride. "I think everyone listens to music for a type of escape tactic. Many people run for the same reason. For me, combining the two is pure ecstasy. I can keep my mind engaged but just a little distanced from the task—I forget about my calves burning, my quads tightening, and I can just run."

Kate Mills

Unlike most other Boston athletes, Kate Mills, 22, doesn't have to worry about the weather. A member of Harvard's undefeated women's swim team, she says, "Other than remembering to layer up and wear a dry hat for the walk over the Charles River to and from practice, you're good to go."

There may be other ways to keep her body in competitive shape, but for Mills, "The only way to get into swim shape is to swim. Bottom line, it's very simple. Cardiovascular wise, you can run and bike for endurance, but you have to swim to stay in swim shape." She should know. This graduating senior and former Olympic trials competitor is in the race for the 2012 U.S. Olympic team.

TRIATHLONS

Tori VanNederynen

Over the past two years, chiropractor Tori VanNederynen, 31, has completed two Iron Man competitions and is now training for this year's event in Panama City. "It's a lot of high intensity and functional movement. There's a lot of jump rope, sprinting, rowing, squats, pull-ups—several rounds as fast as you can with no stops. You train at a high threshold." She requires a partner in pain. "Pairing up with people at different levels pushes each individual to go harder, faster. The community-oriented unity of all the groups around here are great, but just for safety purposes, you really shouldn't go it alone."

Barring a serious health restriction, she says, anyone can complete an Iron Man course. "It's just a question of believing yourself when you tell your legs, 'OK, just 112 miles on the bike after a 2.5 mile swim, and we're almost done.' And going for it."

Erik Ferjentsik

Rock-climber Erik Ferjentsik, 30, says that while there are great gyms around Boston, "one of the reasons I began this sport was to stay outside for as long as possible." Health-minded hippies, Downtown financiers and everyone in between find common (vertical) ground at places like Quincy Quarries and Newton's Hammond Pond. Ferjentsik pursues the sport for the rock-climbing version of runner's high. "It's akin to meditation for me. Something about the fear element, or the adrenaline, but when you peak at your personal level of difficulty, and you have to hyperfocus, your body just starts to breathe correctly and you reach this zen that creates, for me, this dope-like addiction."

There's a misconception that rock climbers are muscle jocks. "The sport is 70/30 men to women, and it's due largely to the misconception that you need brute strength. In truth, women have a lower center of gravity, which is a huge plus in terms of balance and weight distribution. Besides, footwork is far more valuable than how much you can bench."

A WALK IN THE PARK

IN SUSURRUS, PLAYWRIGHT and director David Leddy eliminates something usually thought mandatory for a dramatic performance: the actors. Equipped with headphones and maps, the audience strolls through the Boston Public Garden listening to a reinterpretation of A Midsummer Night's Dream that includes lessons on botany, bird anatomy, opera and memorials. Tailored to the landscape, the play is both love story and nature walk. Put it all in context May 20–June 5.

The Beaver ★★ ½ Director Jodie Foster's low-budget labor of love grapples sincerely with mental illness in a patently absurd context. It doesn't quite work, but provides a cinematic exorcism for the public's increasingly conflicted relationship with Mel Gibson. It also gives a platform for one of his most indelible performances. Gibson stars as a clinically depressed basket case. After a comically disastrous suicide attempt, he discovers a beat-up puppet in the garbage. Spontaneously, he concocts a radical form of therapy in which he'll only communicate through the puppet, which just so happens to snarl in the cadence of Gibson's Edge of Darkness costar Ray Winstone. It's a depressive's dream, the chance to start everything all over again with a new, unaccountable identity. What's impressive is Foster's ardent insistence that there are no quick fixes and easy outs. This should be common sense, but it's positively startling to hear from a Hollywood movie. Good intentions, plus a stunning Gibson performance, go a long way toward damming up The Beaver's obvious flaws. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

The Double Hour ★★★ ½ Lanky, sad-eyed Ksenia Rappoport stars as Sonia, a put-upon chambermaid at a fancy hotel. Filippo Timi co-stars as Guido, an ex-cop on the skids, reduced to working as a security guard at an absurdly overdecorated mansion. Information is parceled out slowly, in almost elliptical, tension-building intervals. But on their three-minute, hastily arranged "speed date," something mysterious clicks between Guido and Sonia. The Double Hour takes its title from an old Italian superstition of Guido's—when it's 11:11 you have to make a wish, and roughly a third of the way into this movie a shocking act of violence sends it spinning in a couple of different directions. Like the pulp cousin to Certified Copy, The Double Hour exists in two places at once, making sure to stay grounded in emotional truth. I must tread lightly here to avoid spoilers, because part of what thrilled me was the all-too-rare sensation of never knowing where the picture was headed next. It feels like Edith Wharton wrote a film noir. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Fast Five ★★★ The most awesomely stupid and stupidly awesome movie I've seen in ages, this fifth installment in the apparently never-ending automotive porn series sends the entire gang to Rio and reunites almost every not-dead player from the entire franchise to pull off an Ocean's Eleven–style heist on a Brazilian crime lord. Bloated and egregiously overlong, director Justin Lin's spectacle piles on one insane set-piece after another, culminating in a symphony of mass destruction that violates every law of physics with bravura showmanship. It was a brilliant move to bring in Dwayne Johnson as a nemesis, since he and Vin Diesel look like roided-out, bald doppelgängers competing to out-testosterone one another. It's all very sweaty, homoerotic and violent, but then I've always been a sucker for this sort of muscle-head naïveté. Lin is one of the few guys working who can make gargantuan action sequences spatially comprehensible, and for all its goofiness, the picture's climax had me kicking my feet with joy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hanna ★★ ½ Director Joe Wright's bombastic junk-food thriller stars Atonement's Saoirse Ronan as a genetically engineered super-soldier trained in the wilderness by her rogue-agent father (Eric Bana) to hunt and kill in sync with the Chemical Brothers' throbbing electronic soundtrack. Cate Blanchett wins the Melissa Leo award for most egregious overacting as the honey-accented C.I.A. honcho aching to neutralize the young Hanna. The results sometimes feel like a tweener Bourne movie and sometimes like an art-house Kick-Ass, minus the logic but with plenty more ostentatious camera acrobatics. Wright has always been a bit of a show-off in the director's chair, and he doesn't skimp on Hanna's goofy visual flourishes. The camera spins upside down and back again, often for no reason. It's violent, propulsive and sometimes very silly. The question of whether or not you're laughing with the film—or at it—looms large over the quasi-tragic final reel. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

Jane Eyre ★★ There have been at least 12 big-screen adaptations of Charlotte Brontë's 1847 novel, as well as another dozen or so made for TV. Is there anything more we can gain from yet another couple hours with Jane and Mr. Rochester? Director Cary Joji Fukunaga's take is respectful, for the most part adequate and,

A MAID'S TALE

Kristen Wiig brings harsh reality to the dream wedding.

Bridesmaids ★★★
Starring Kristen Wiig, Maya Rudolph, Rose Byrne, Chris O'Dowd, Jill Clayburgh and Jon Hamm. Written by Kristen Wiig and Annie Mumolo. Directed by Paul Feig. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

SORRY GALS, we understand that it's supposed to be your special day and all, but weddings are absurdly expensive. Sometimes they're also a royal pain.

That's the bittersweet truth behind Bridesmaids, an erratic and strangely moving comedy cowritten by and starring Saturday Night Live's Kristen Wiig. Produced by Judd Apatow and directed by Freaks and Geeks creator Paul Feig, the movie is a bit messy and way too long. But it's also grounded in an economic reality that few films dare address. As we're recovering from the absurd Wills and Kate nuptial frenzy, it's refreshing to be reminded of the toll a friend's wedding can take on your pocketbook.

Wiig is annoying as hell on SNL, pulling the same improv-group faces in nearly every sketch. But Whip It, Adventureland and Extract proved that she's terrific in movies. Provided with more than five minutes to mug for the camera, she's shockingly adept at creating well-rounded characters. Here, she stars as Annie, a talented pastry chef who, in a lousy fluke of timing, opened a bakery just as the recession hit. With the business gone, she finds herself broke, middle-aged and living with a couple of spectacularly irritating roommates.

The engagement of her best friend, Lillian (fellow SNL vet Maya Rudolph), should be cause for celebration. And it is, sort of. Lillian is marrying into a lot of money, and she asks Annie to be her maid of honor without realizing the dire financial jam it's about to cause. The screenplay (penned by Wiig and Annie Mumolo) is particularly perceptive with regard to the way marriage can alter long-term friendships. You can be very happy for someone but still sad that you're not going to see them as often anymore.

And Annie's already a mess, now working at a jewelry store, which isn't exactly the perfect job for someone recovering from a broken engagement. After work, she spends her evenings in a dreary, no-strings-attached affair with a lothario who doesn't like her very much. Jon Hamm plays up the sleaziness for maximum comic effect, cuddling up for a bit of postcoital pillow talk and gently asking her to leave.

The screenplay is particularly perceptive with regard to the way marriage can alter long-term friendships.

Making matters worse is Helen (Rose Byrne), Lillian's new friend and exactly the kind of super-rich, too-perfect person that makes Annie want to put her head in an oven. Helen commandeers the wedding plans, flaunting her connections and wealth at every turn, driving Annie to an increasingly drunken and resentful stupor.

There's one bright spot, a local cop named Rhodes (Chris O'Dowd) who keeps pulling Annie over for violations on her junkbox car, mostly because he's smitten. The two have a terrific, combative chemistry, and O'Dowd's gentle deference is a jolt compared to Hamm's boorishness. Interestingly, the biggest stumbling block in this relationship is not any plot contrivance, but merely that Annie thinks he's too good for her.

Director Feig proved with the short-lived but long-lamented Freaks and Geeks that he's got an uncommon sense of empathy when it comes to messed-up characters. I'm surprised it took him this long to make the jump to feature films. True to form, Bridesmaids is best in its quieter moments, with telling observations and lovely character beats. In any other movie, Helen would be a cardboard villain, but Feig grants a couple of glimpses into the unhappiness of her allegedly perfect life, making it clear that her passive-aggressive perkiness is overcompensating for a deep sadness.

Alas, Feig's old producer Judd Apatow is on board as well, and it's unclear if Bridesmaids benefits from his influence. I'm on record as a longtime fan of Apatow's sensitive gross-out formula, and you'd be hard-pressed to find a more ardent defender of his unfairly maligned Funny People. But Bridesmaids occasionally stops dead in its tracks for raunchy, scatological set-pieces that the movie really doesn't need. An unfortunately distended food-poisoning sequence leads to all sorts of vomiting and diarrhea and feels like a desperate attempt for a belly laugh. The movie too often breaks from its carefully constructed reality in order to phone in a halfhearted gag that seems inserted just for the sake of having something to put in the trailer.

Still, these are minor speedbumps in a movie that has a lot on its mind. Wiig's character is granted depth and accountability rarely seen in female leads, and I honestly could've watched an entire picture just about her and the cop trying to navigate a new relationship. She proves she can carry a movie, and Feig has finally gotten around to directing one. Hopefully next time they'll ditch the crass interludes and shoot one from the heart. ✖✖✖

as far as I can see, has no compelling reason to exist. Fukunaga attempts to shake up the text with some rough-hewn naturalism, fixating on the Derbyshire landscapes and overplaying the miserable weather. The shots are handheld and often underexposed, announcing from the outset that this isn't your mom's Jane Eyre. Except it really is. Once you look past the shaky-cameras and ugly costumes, there's nothing new. Luckily, Michael Fassbender is there to liven things up as the moody Rochester. Wearing unfortunate, pubic-looking sideburns, this wry Irish actor plays up the character's lazy contempt for everyone in his company. But Mia Wasikowska's Jane just blandly stands around, suffering from Fukunaga's ugly natural lighting and deliberately drab color scheme. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Limitless ★★ ½ During any other era, Bradley Cooper's entitled frat-boy smarminess would've stranded him in villain roles. Lucky for him, we live in a post-Kardashian, "winning" America, so Cooper's cheerfully amoral swagger can carry the day in an odd duck like Limitless, wherein the hero's fundamental shallowness is all part of the fun. Playing a bedraggled novelist, Cooper's brazen opportunist happens upon an experimental drug that increases the subject's brainpower tenfold. Naturally, he parlays this superheroic ability into a career of Wall Street plundering and a lifestyle of Manhattan luxury. The strained thriller machinations wear thin over time—and I'm still not exactly sure how that murder plot exactly plays out—but director Neil Burger polishes this turd to a very fine sheen (no pun intended) that's visually intoxicating. Slick and as guiltily pleasurable as a reality show, Limitless has no interest in pondering consequences or ethics. It's an adrenaline rush, as charming and vacant as the movie's own front man. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Meek's Cutoff ★★★★ Set in 1845 and loosely inspired by actual events, director Kelly Riechardt's austere, shattering story from the Oregon Trail follows three families who broke off from a larger wagon train, taking the advice of Stephen Meek (Bruce Greenwood), a bearded blowhard who claimed to know a shortcut. Decked out in a Buffalo Bill–esque fringe jacket and constantly babbling frontier horse-pucky, he's a parody of cowboy arrogance. Except you won't find any laughs here. Riechardt's film is muted, severe and hardly an audience-friendly experience. In the spirit of Gus Van Sant's Gerry, it's one of those art movies that film critics like because nothing happens. I was mesmerized. Meek's Cutoff is about the day-to-day grind, mundane tasks and the sick, helpless feeling of not knowing where you're going. As supplies run low, there's a mounting sense of queasiness and dread that becomes overwhelming. When the movie was over, I had to go walk it off for a while before I felt like talking to anybody. (At Kendall Square.)

Potiche ★★ ½ This minor diversion from writer/director François Ozon seems conceived mainly as a love letter to his iconic leading lady, Catherine Deneuve. Based on a musty 1970s play by Pierre Barillet and Jean-Pierre Grédy, the film stars Deneuve as a desperate housewife turning a blind eye to her umbrella-tycoon husband's incessant philandering. Everything changes when hubby (a weaselly Fabrice Luchini) is taken hostage by striking workers. Deneuve's Suzanne steps in as CEO to handle the union negotiations and, as it turns out, the old gal's got a knack for business. Ozon eats up the 1977 setting, wallowing in the gauzy colors and tacky fashions, without ever quite committing to the strident women's lib speeches in the original script. He seems more interested in figuring out how many Umbrellas of Cherbourg references he can make, and in indulging Deneuve's seldom-used crack comic timing. Potiche dithers here and yon, with a deliberately dated tinny score and retro camera movements that annoy just as often as they delight. (At Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Scream 4 ★★ ½ In this age of Saw sequels and torture porn, the teen slasher flicks parodied by the snarky late-'90s Scream franchise can't help but feel quaint, which is sort of the point of this belated fourth installment. A long 10 years after the third film, original cast members Neve Campbell, Courteney Cox and David Arquette return to Woodsboro and find a new generation of middling actresses stupidly running up flights of stairs, as a pop-culture-savvy serial killer seeks to "remake" the original picture according to the new rules of Hollywood's incessant reboots. It's a nifty hook that writer Kevin Williamson hasn't quite gotten a handle on, and director Wes Craven seems awfully rusty staging these repetitive stabbings. But then the final third of the movie veers into something rather extraordinary, piling on meta-twists and actively insulting the target audience to the point where you expect the now middle-aged original cast to just tell all these damn kids to get off their lawn. The anger is bracing, and endearing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Source Code ★★★ A man (Jake Gyllenhaal) wakes up without his memory on a Chicago commuter train to find a hot fellow passenger (Michelle Monaghan) is being overtly friendly. There's also the unsettling reality that someone else's face is staring back at him in the bathroom mirror. Then the whole damn train explodes. Quickly plunged back to a frosty control bunker, video-linked to an even chillier commanding officer (Vera Farmiga), Gyllenhaal's shell-shocked war vet discovers that—thanks to the brain's capacity to retain information after death (plus a quantum physics equation to be named later)—a secret military forensic operation has allowed him to mind-meld with a civilian victim and witness a terrorist attack that took place hours before. What follows is Groundhog Day meets Speed, a star-crossed love story unfolding in eight-minute couplets. Paced like a rocket and unfolding perilously close to real time, Source Code creates a maze in which we want the hero to solve the mystery and save the girl from a tragedy that has already occurred. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Thor ★★ Marvel Films' construction of a bridge to nowhere moves forward with another mega-budget prequel laying laborious groundwork for next summer's The Avengers. This time we've got Chris Hemsworth as the arrogant Norse god of thunder, banished to Earth by his father (a never-hammier Anthony Hopkins) to learn a little humility. At first glance, Kenneth Branagh would seem an odd choice to direct a superhero movie, but as the oddball cast prances around the gaudy realm of Asgard in chintzy armor, it's

Memory Games

The Way We Were What happens when the memory of love resonates after it's been lost? That's the question at the heart of Como Esquecer, a Brazilian film about a 30-something who finds herself suddenly single. Screening at the MFA on May 11 as part of the Boston LGBT Film Festival, Malu De Martino's movie depicts love in a transcendent form—crossing culture, gender and sexual preference. The festival runs through May 15 at locations around Boston. Caroline Jones endearing to watch him attack this junk material like it's another one of his Shakespeare adaptations. Hemsworth has a hearty charisma, and the movie's mildly amusing midsection plays like a Viking version of Crocodile Dundee. Asgard's tacky production design owes a debt to Mike Hodges' kitsch classic Flash Gordon, but the guy next to me said it reminded him of a Vegas bathroom. The problem is there's no real weight to any of this stuff. Even the hammer looks like a plastic toy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Win Win ★★★ Writer/director Thomas McCarthy, known for Sundance smashes like The Station Agent and The Visitor, doesn't have a lot of challenging ideas up his sleeve. As far as I can tell, he takes a gimmicky construct and casts it wisely, drawing out fresh performances from underused actors by playing to their strengths in endearing showcase roles. There really isn't anything wrong with the formula. McCarthy's latest stars Paul Giamatti as a schlubby high school coach who accidentally ends up being foster-father to a solemn wrestling prodigy with abandonment issues. Ethical knots abound, paying lip service to troubled times in recession-addled New Jersey, but Win Win truly takes flight whenever it becomes a true underdog sports movie—scoring big laughs from simple three-shots of Giamatti, Jeffrey Tambor and the never-not-funny Bobby Cannavale as beleaguered coaches of the worst wrestling team in the Garden State. McCarthy doesn't ever get a handle on his tale's courtroom histrionics, but the lovable characters and genre payoffs make it a pleasure nonetheless. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

NEW VINTAGE

Indie-rock veterans discover new dimensions to seasoned sounds.

Damon & Naomi play Great Scott on May 23.

Anabel Vázquez Rodríguez

THERE'S A DRUM SET where a couch should be in Damon Krukowski and Naomi Yang's apartment—a telltale sign that the married duo is in the midst of recording another album.

"There'll be six months to a year when we don't have a living room," Krukowski says from their Cambridge home and part-time studio. "Our living room is not big enough for both a couch and a drum kit, so it's either/or. We very much know when we're working on a record because our whole house turns upside down."

These days, everything's looking right-side up with the release of False Beats and True Hearts. It's the latest and most accessible in a line of melancholy records that Damon & Naomi have made since their late '80s start as two-thirds of alternative rock band Galaxie 500.

"We wanted to have a much lighter mood than our last record," Yang says, referring to 2007's Within These Walls, an introspective disc influenced by Frank Sinatra's sad albums of the late '50s.

"Walking Backwards" sets the new album's warmer tone, from the curled opening hum of associate Michio Kurihara's lead guitar, to Krukowski and Yang's nestled vocal harmonies. Her dulcet voice, in particular, evokes the English folk-rock they've been listening to, and Yang's shift from electric to acoustic piano gives the record another delicate flavor.

"We always make records in reaction to the last one," Krukowski says. "Everything's changed for us in some ways. We never go back [to the studio] thinking, 'How do we get the sound we had last time?' It's much more 'What's the right sound this time?'"

For False Beats (a term for technically undesired piano notes), that sound is a result not only of Yang's new upright piano, but also the process of reassembling the duo's studio from scratch each time they begin a new album.

"Usually some piece of equipment in between has either become defunct or broken," Krukowski says. "The technology has changed, and we can never remember how we got things the way they were before. I've given up ever even trying. You just start again."

It's a continual path of discovery for Galaxie 500's former rhythm section. "When you add an instrument or a new harmonic idea or these challenges that we do for ourselves, you do, in some ways, bring yourself back to that original situation of not knowing what we were doing and having to find our way," he says.

That's what it was like when New York high-school classmates Dean Wareham, Krukowski and Yang reconnected at Harvard and respectively learned to play the guitar, drums and bass.

"We were completely inept," Krukowski says of those formative years in Galaxie 500. "We were just trying to find a decent sound... and that was what came out. When we tried to stretch and do it in other ways, it just sounded bad to us. If we tried to play fast, we couldn't hold it together."

Galaxie 500's slow, spacious sound stood in stark contrast to Boston's garage-rock scene at the time. "I don't think we ever fit into a scene," he says. "We were responding to records in our collection that we loved, and it was the Velvet Underground, Big Star, the Modern Lovers, bands that weren't around anymore."

When singer/guitarist Wareham quit the group in 1991, Damon & Naomi slowly rose from the ashes, releasing music on the Rough Trade and Sub Pop labels, and founding avant-garde publishing house Exact Change, whose catalog includes books by John Cage and Salvador Dalí. "We felt the same way about books that we always felt about records, and we saw a need," Krukowski says.

The duo also matured as musicians. Yang supplemented her bass with keyboards, while Krukowski turned his focus to acoustic guitar rather than drums. They even record basic tracks with guitar and keyboards before overdubbing the drums and bass. "It's not the most steady, rational timekeeping, but it has the most life," he says. "It's a crazy skill that we developed."

In turn, they stick to guitar and keyboard onstage, joined by False Beats sidemen Kurihara and saxophonist Bhob Rainey for a tour that hits Great Scott on May 23. Krukowski and Yang have also settled into their role as singers. "Neither of us were busting out in song as kids," he says. "We're not entertainers. But we're learning to communicate through our voices." ✖✖✖

Strike a Chord

EinSteinway Child piano prodigy turned indie-pop performer Ian Axel combines youthfulness, whimsy and skill. After honing vocals to match his talents with the ivories, he began to churn out catchy tunes fit for dancing hipsters and sentimentalists alike. His title hit, "This Is the New Year," is a catchy, uplifting number, while "Gone" is the ideal soundtrack for a heart-wrenching TV scene. Despite—or because of—the occasional dip into earnestness, Axel's nerdy charm and piano prowess will undoubtedly make him a pop-rock fixture. See him live on May 20 at Cafe 939.

Shades of Gray

Color Outside the Lines Some charcoal drawings say a lot about color. Artist Taryn Wells explores her own identity as she creates lifelike sketches of mixed-race children resembling herself and her brother. Referencing the history of race relations in America with a biting sense of humor, the pictures convey anxieties about ethnic ambiguity and intersectional identity. Somewhere in the Middle is on display at the Brookline Arts Center through June 13. Amanda Warren

Healthy Appetite

Moderation Proclamation Tina Haupert started blogging to help keep track of her personal food and fitness habits, but she didn't expect anyone to actually read her updates, much less offer a book contract for them. The local author's debut, Carrots 'N' Cake, offers recipes and tips to make moderation work anytime, from holiday feasts to weekend lunches. She'll share her sweet secrets on May 19 at Brookline Booksmith.

CRI DECOR

How Much Is That Warhol in the Window?

It was home-decor porn of the highest order when the Cyclorama hosted a gala preview party for AD 20/21, a contemporary art and furniture show to benefit the Boston Architectural College.

On hand to plotz over the gorgeous objets and artwork were such tastemakers as the evening's honorees, Massimo and Lella Vignelli, BAC head honcho Ted Landsmark, discerning connoisseur Edwin Steel, studly mag editor Kyle Hoepner, the delightful Daria McLean, dapper siblings Paul and Andrew Snider, Ralph Lauren smoothie Darwin Cordoba, sporty shorty Stephanie Scavullo of Porsche Design, and male model Cory Martin, looking almost as good as the goods he was modeling.

Among the evening's most amusing comments: One guest, leaving early, said, "I've gotta run, but I'll see you soon at something else with expensive crap to look at."

Well-Aged

To look as good at 40 as you did in your 20s is no mean feat, but Masterpiece Theatre has managed to do just that.

To celebrate the show's anniversary, WGBH hosted a gala at its Brighton studios, where the guests included the show's host, impish actor Alan Cumming, executive producer Rebecca Eaton (who was just named one of the 100 most influential people in the world by Time magazine), PBS president Paula Kerger, 'GBH grand poobah Jon Abbott, cellist/guitarist Yair Evnine, Cantabridgian party pair Ann and Graham Gund, Chestnut Hellions Cokie and Lee Perry, the soignée Wendy Shattuck and her main man, Sam Plimpton, beneficent benefactors Margie and Paul Kargman, and one woman who said, "I'm appalled by Congress trying to... well, scratch that. I'm appalled by Congress, period."

The general consensus was that the party itself was a masterpiece, and one guest said, "Imagine how dull this would be if it was for the anniversary of Nova."

I Love the Sound of Breaking Glass

Maybe it's Dale Chihuly's universal appeal, or the winter that wouldn't quit, or the fact that the Museum of Fine Arts is an ideal place to diddle away an evening, but for some reason, the opening night reception for the glass-blower's new exhibit was packed to the rafters with everyone fabulous from near and far.

Among them: sexy mamacita Olivia Ives-Flores, up-and-coming artist Erica Chin, museum muckety-muck Ranch Kimball, the swanlike Stephanie Warburg, Venezuelan smoothie Raphael Jaimes-Branger and the sweeter than Tupelo honey Elliot Wright,

> The most amusing moment took place when the sound of breaking glass had two guests simultaneously shouting, "It wasn't me!"

financial titan Robert White, diminutive PR powerhouse Barbara Quiroga, the ever-charming Leathermans, Elizabeth and Bill, and one dignified older gentleman who said, "It would be fun to rent this out for a private party and have everyone tripping on mushrooms."

However, the evening's most amusing moment took place in the courtyard during the cocktail hour, when the sound of breaking glass had two guests simultaneously shouting, "It wasn't me!"

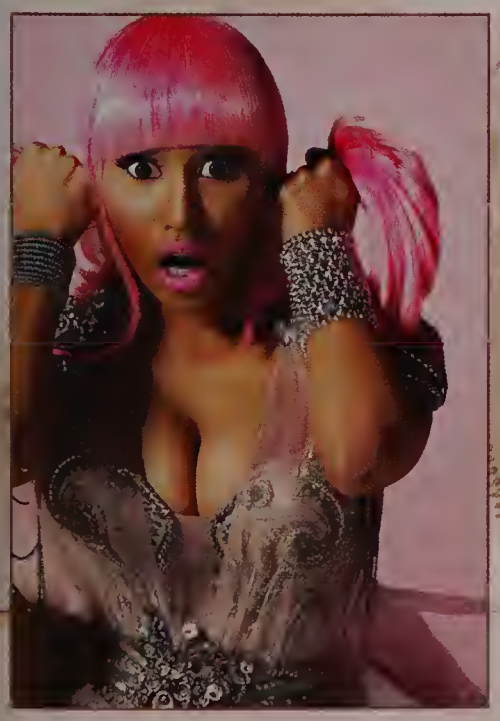
QUOTES:

1. "We're having sexual trivia on the second floor."

2. "You need 1,000 square feet of space per year that you've been married."



3. "Your mother had 17 kids?!? Did she end up with graffiti on her uterus?"

4. "Once there's an umbrella up your ass, there's no point in opening it." ×××

The Parable of the Curious Elephant

Nick wore a hipster mustache all last week (see page 16 for the embarrassing details), and it got me thinking about degeneracy. Cultural ("I enjoy Mob Wives"), moral ("Mob Wives informs my personal behavior") and spiritual ("I produce reality television programs.") Not long ago, I heard the argument that our societal penchant for tattoos is a sign of encroaching barbarism. Hence, only a Hun, or someone who apes the norms of Huns, would needle a lifelike drawing of, say, a mob wife into his buttock. Of course, that's a bad syllogism. Most people with tattoos or questionable facial hair (see picture, above right) don't plunder Western Europe. But they may have atrocious style.

Style is like a sea lamprey—a slippery customer that can bite you in the ass when you're caught wearing a Speedo.* Amanda Knorr gets a grip on it in this issue with a pick of chic, practical outfits. This is no small feat considering that, in a world of nigh seven billion opinionated consumers, it's hard to agree on anything to do with style. Except that Nick's mustache sucks.

Andrew Rimas, Editor
andrew@improper.com

 When people ask me why I make so many weird animal references in my letters, I tell them the parable of the curious elephant. Its thirst for enlightenment led it to take out too many student loans, and it died in debt. Which served it right for asking dumb questions.*

GROWING UP, Joe Lotuff and his brother swept their father's apparel factory in Ware, Mass. "One thing we learned when we were young is everything is horsefeathers except the product," he says. Now the owners of Lotuff & Clegg in Fall River, the brothers produce leather goods meant both to last and to display the scars of time. Wear and tear say more about an owner than a fancy logo that exists only so "someone knows the jerk sitting across from them has a $6,500 bag." "Maybe it's my New England background," Lotuff says, explaining his philosophy. "If you think of great design over time, it's a simple apparatus, and it's pure to its purpose." NICK ALTSCHULLER

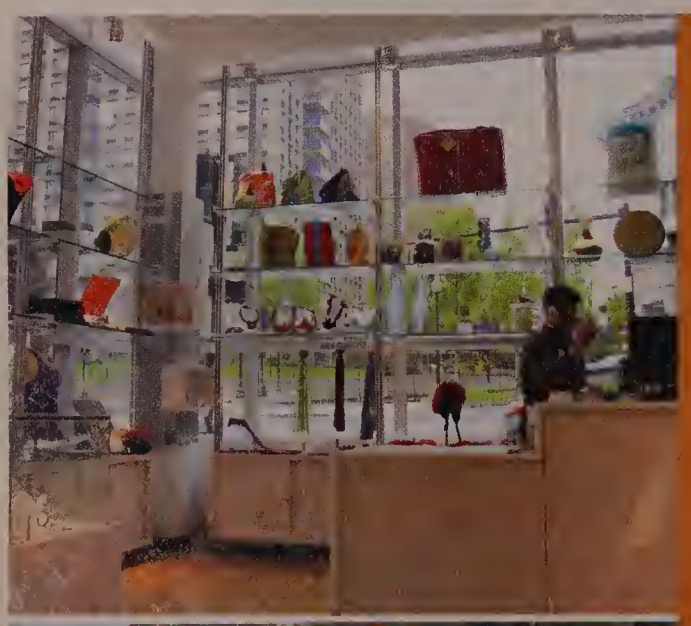
LOAF, ACTUALLY



Staff meals and food trucks: Two separate concepts with the shared goal of providing cheap, high-quality food to folks in a hurry. From their weekend parking spots in West Roxbury and the SoWa Open Market, Rialto alums Patrick Gilmartin and Adam Gendreau cleverly mismatch fine-dining fodder with on-the-go grub, creating hybrids like decadent foie gras baklava or the quirky meatloaf-pastrami sandwich. It's a cross between comfort food leftovers, Jewish deli fare and a Cubano, pressed between griddle-crisped bread.

Massachusetts College of Art and Design strikes a blow against the notion of the starving art-school grad. MassArt Made, the school's new boutique, showcases student-, alum- and faculty-made wares. The jury-selected collection is just as you might imagine: charming (glass pumpkins), risky (spiky rubber rings) and inspired (gauzy flower pins with jeweled centers). The price range, on the other hand, is a surprise, running from a few bucks into the realm of investment. Best of all, 10 percent of proceeds go toward student scholarships. ELIZABETH BOMZE

CENTRO LOCATION

Mexican, minus the tequila

IF YOU CAN'T FIND EXACTLY what you're craving on El Centro's extensive menu, chef/owner Allan Rodriguez promises to make it for you. "We have the sauce, the ingredients and the time," he says.

Eager to please—he's created a ceviche with nopalitos (baby cactus) for vegans—Mexican native Rodriguez says his new South End restaurant will "take everything that's missing" from other local Mexican eateries and serve it up with authenticity.

Corn and flour tortillas are made in-house, as are the moles and other sauces.

Provenance counts: The dried beef in the carne machaca is imported from south of the border. One recipe, Rodriguez says, is "from the guy who sells tacos two blocks from my house in Mexico."

Because Rodriguez is still in the process of obtaining a cordials license, El Centro will initially focus on Mexican beers and a roster of sangrias, including spiced and frozen versions. He expects to open by late May, serving lunch, dinner and weekend brunch.

WHEN RED LANTERN debuts in the former Bertucci's on Stanhope Street in June, it will feature what chef Kevin Long describes as "high-energy Asian" fare. Long, the executive chef for Big Night Entertainment Group, the company behind the Estate and Foxwoods' Shrine and the Scorpion Bar, among others, says the restaurant aims to bring a "flashy, magnificent" venue to the long-empty spot.

A wood grill will turn out some of Long's favorites. "One of the things I absolutely adore is an authentic char siu pork," he says. Another favorite is lobster rolls, which Long will make with tempura fried lobster and tobiko, or flying fish roe.

THE NEW CHEF AT SAM'S, Asia Mei, has hit the ground running with a full rewrite of the menu. The BC grad, who's also an alum of Franklin Southie, Sibling Rivalry and Hamersley's, is starting from scratch with dishes like pistachio-crusted leg of lamb with pomegranate molasses.

DRAMATIC FLAIR

BIJOU
51 Stuart St., Boston
(617-357-4565)
bijouboston.com

When word got out that George Aboujaoude, owner of Cafeteria in the Back Bay, was opening a club in the Theater District, partygoers anticipated its launch with bated, Patrón-scented breath. Bijou, the split-level concept that Aboujaoude has been working on with W Hotel designer Stephen Chung, was delayed for half a year, but they're finally ready to station the velvet ropes. Aboujaoude's chosen venue, the once-glamorous Bijou Theater, had fallen into disarray and—like any good starlet—was going to need some rehab to be camera-ready. "Every time we turned a corner there was another thing that needed to be fixed," he says. "I feel like now we've got it right."

Today, the second-floor lounge looks like it's been to second base with King Midas, dripping with golden accents and lamé drapes. The legions who frequent Cafeteria will love the metallic couches and the ceiling's rotating light show, but you can't write off Bijou as just another fist-pumping factory. It's the first club in town to offer a craft cocktail program, and many of the signature sips wink at the building's history.

"This is where people will come after work for a drink, to listen to the DJ or the live band, whatever we've got going that night," says Aboujaoude. "They'll move upstairs later on." Utensil-free snacks from chef Michael Navarrete are served on both floors and range from caviar to skewers.

A dark and dramatic third floor features a custom JBL Series 5 Dance System (one of the few of its kind in the U.S.) and a trio of bars, each topped by a unique, linear chandelier. "This was the first theater in the country to have electricity," Aboujaoude adds. "We wanted to bring some of that history into it." The chandeliers, varying from acrylic prisms to bicycle reflectors, glisten against the shadowed backdrop and back-lit bars. It's an offbeat, modern atmosphere, with more than a nod to the past. KYLE WRIGHT

Amy's Judgments

Open Heart

Amy Brenneman is an Emmy-nominated actress and producer, best known for her roles on Judging Amy, NYPD Blue and Private Practice. She returns to Harvard University, her alma mater, with the American Repertory Theater debut of her autobiographical drama, Mouth Wide Open, playing through May 29.

What do you remember most about Harvard?
Walking along the Charles and looking at all the beautiful architecture. Los Angeles doesn't have architecture like this.

Is it a challenge playing yourself?
When I created Judging Amy there was a lot of me in the main character, so I feel like this is an extension of that.

Does your play take much poetic license?
There are aspects of me that are exaggerated or altered to make sense. I wasn't writing down conversations that I had around the world verbatim, so I did have to write things down as I remembered them.

Is it more difficult to act on stage or on screen?
I fell in love with filmmaking because of the intimacy, but I've learned that you can tune into that on stage as well. I don't see it as more difficult, it's just like you're working with oil paints instead of watercolors.

What's it like being on Private Practice?
It's a challenge to keep [my character] fresh, but I have the advantage of not being overly identified with her because people recognize me from past works.

Where will you take Mouth Wide Open next?
I have no idea. It's such a personal work, full of my life lessons and opportunities to laugh with me. It's like the search for the perfect cradle for your baby.

Drink of the Moment

MAIN SQUEEZE

Boston bartenders are squeezing all they can out of twists on traditional lemonade, and for good reason. A lemonade base is both versatile and approachable, tasty for teetotalers and otherwise. Fruity varieties abound with huckleberry (Henrietta's Table), pink guava (Stella) and strawberry-steeped rhubarb (Post 390). The latter's Post Hard Lemonade has a soft floral finish, thanks to notes from Peychaud's bitters and sprigs of lavender. Marliave and Highland Kitchen add cucumber to their W.C. Fields and Dorchester lemonades, respectively, while the trend takes an herbaceous turn in a rosemary version at Jamaica Plain's Ten Tables.

YOU'VE GOTTA HAVE TART

One of the simpler iterations is Hamersley's Bistro's Lemonata. Made with Grey Goose Citron, freshly squeezed lemon, sour mix and limoncello, the frothy cocktail recalls classic Del's frozen lemonade. It's a pale, ungarnished tipple with a pucker-inducing tang followed by a long, acidic finish.

All of these cocktails aim for summery brightness rather than complex layering, a goal best achieved through vodka. "Vodka is a base that doesn't interfere with other flavors. If this was a gin drink, you'd taste the gin. But this is a lemon drink," says Hamersley's' bartender Mark Osgood. Simple as they are, the drinks pair nicely with light fish dishes, but the unabashed citrus stands up equally well to chocolaty desserts.

Lemonade and sunshine go together, so it's no coincidence that these cocktails are springing up at some of the city's patioed venues. From MET Bar's Spiked Peach Lemonade to 29 Newbury's New-Berry Lemonade (Eastern Standard even has a lemonade mocktail), drinkers face a wealth of choices for summertime sidewalk sipping. LINDSEY CANANT

This one is considered "natural" because it contains a physical blocker (titanium dioxide), reflecting sunlight away from the skin. Physical sunscreens are the most effective, but they're not as popular as chemical ones because they leave a white residue on the skin.

Coppertone Sport Sunscreen SPF 30
Chemical sunscreens like this block sunlight, but also absorb ultraviolet light, converting it into non-harmful energy. The FDA states that no sunscreen is actually waterproof. The ones that are labeled as such should retain some effectiveness for up to 80 minutes in the water. "Water resistant" should last for up to 40 minutes.

Kiehl's Super Fluid UV Defense SPF 50+
Also chemical (avobenzone, octocrylene, octisalate, etc.), the SPF numbers here only refer to protection against UVB (ultraviolet-B) light. Most dermatologists recommend a "broad spectrum" sunscreen, like this one, that's mixed with chemicals for blocking UVA light, too.

Exploring the shock of hair

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

THE BEARD IS FOR THE SOLITARY man. The look is tough and rugged, worn by men of the earth—the lumberjack, the sailor. Yet the beard is a mask. The beard is for the guarded, the quiet. The beard is a shield. It's a cowboy hat turned low over the eyes. It's Jack Nicholson's sunglasses. A man's beard asks a stranger to notice his appearance, and to please quash any urge to strike up a conversation. The more isolated the man, the longer the thicket: a monk's whiskers impress, a hermit's beard is nonpareil. But the beard is good company, a faithful pet to scratch. I've grown a few in my day, and each time I raise the clippers to shear my face, I feel I'm about to harm something innocent.

My winter beard had overstayed its welcome, and my girlfriend, Susan, had started making subtle hints that it was time to shave. I'm good at ducking subtle hints, but once it became a birthday request, I relented. A lover of fools, she asked that I keep a mustache for her party. Out of curiosity and revenge, I left it on my face for more than a week.

For both our sakes, I avoided the tired pedophile jokes and went with the horseshoe mustache, a favorite of bikers and Sam Elliott. Unlike the beard, which can act as a social cattle-catcher, I found a mustache invites friends to openly comment on your appearance. "Very Dukes of Hazzard," said one pal. "You look like you're about to do something indecent," said another. The general consensus, after an hour or a beer, was that the look succeeded.

Counterintuitively, silence was agony. Around strangers, at the gym or on the street, people can just assume you've lost a bet or happen to be a big Freddie Mercury fan. It takes a brave man to flaunt an assertive mustache.

But while beards are for loners, donning a mustache initiates you into a brotherhood. On day two of my experiment, Susan and I shared a table at a snazzy restaurant, my furry horseshoe announcing its presence among the suits and Châteauneuf-du-Pape. In a brief, beautiful moment, I locked eyes with a waiter clearing dishes. Beneath his nose grew a majestic handlebar fit for a vaudeville star. We froze, then shared a quick nod of mutual admiration. "That was so strange," said Susan. "It's like you're in a club."

The following day we stopped for pizza. The cashier, sporting a mangy slug of hair on his lip, charged Susan $2.50 for her slice. He then pointed at my face and declared, "His is free."

This sort of support is lovely, but in pensive moments I would reach for my chin, forgetting I'd lost the comfort of stroking my beard. In desperation, I'd twist the wispy ends of my horseshoe, like an adolescent fondling the tattered rags of a treasured security blanket.

There are rough moments with a temporary 'stache: the sideways glances, the coworker who plainly states, "I hate your face." And there is the nightmare scenario I created by carrying a six-pack of cheap beer, a powder keg ignited by one slanderous spark: "You look like such a hipster." From there the shots kept falling. "How's that all going to fit on your bike?" "Yeah, go back to Jamaica Plain." I ran from the room suffering the type of anguish only Morrissey could understand.

Life with a mustache is an odd experience, as the world reacts to a patch of hair you tend to overlook. It's like walking down the street with your fly down. You friends will tell you the truth, but strangers may get uncomfortable.

On my mustache's last night, I put it to a final test. Turning to two women in a bar, I asked, "Does this look work?"

"No," said one.

"Yes," said the other, and both walked away wearing equal looks of disgust.

Dejected, I spun back toward the bar to find a fresh shot of whiskey. "What's this for?" I asked my friend.

"It's not from me, it's from him," he responded.

From behind the taps, the bartender motioned to his moustache and bobbed his head in approval.

Cheers to the gallant mustachioed. Maybe one day I'll rejoin the ranks. ✖✖✖

WHOLE RUDES

TO THE FAT AND FRUMPY BUTTINSKY AT WHOLE FOODS: What business is it of yours that I reclaimed my space in line at Whole Foods? I moved five steps to the left to grab a magazine, and the spacey chick behind me pushed her cart forward. I politely reminded her that I was next in line. Then you felt compelled to say, "You must be from New York or LA." What gave me away? My tan, rockin' body? Girls like you always have issues with women like me. Beacon Hill bitch

To the guy at the Lansdowne who kept hip-checking me: You're lucky that a beer down your back was the worst thing that happened to you. Next time, don't mess with a girl who has a low tolerance for collared shirts and an impressive knowledge of physical restraints. Your threats after the beer incident don't come close to matching what I hear from the drunk drivers I help on a daily basis. I'm not sure what that says about your intelligence or your creativity. Lady law

To the bicyclist who screamed at me at the Boylston Street CVS: When there is a bike on both sides of Comm. Ave., it's too narrow for two vehicles to pass safely, so traffic is reduced to one lane. Apparently you feel that it's OK to slow down traffic on a busy road. I had hoped the bike lane would help the traffic flow, but it's worse. Bikes and cars need to coexist; it's difficult to do so when many cyclists feel they are superior to cars and exempt from traffic rules. If you're rude to drivers and pedestrians, expect them to be rude in return. Vicious cycle

FIGHTING WORDS

A memoir of abandonment, violence and literature

WHEN NOVELIST Andre Dubus II left his wife and four children (one son ran after the disappearing car shouting, "You bum, you bum!"), the bereft family remained living in a depressed Massachusetts mill town. Dad moved to the nearby, mannerly town of Bradford, while the kids lived among poverty, drugs and relentless, face-smashing violence. For them, fighting was expected, and valued.

Young Andre's siblings coped via drug-dealing, withdrawal, depression (brother Jeb, suicidal at one point, found helpful if inappropriate solace in an affair with a former teacher).

Townie
By Andre Dubus III

The author is a Massachusetts native and faculty member at UMass Lowell.

Andre took up weight-lifting and boxing with an eye toward defending the underdog, beating up one of Jeb's tormenters to the tune of two knocked-out teeth. After his sister was raped, the detached Dad swung into guilty, distorted action, purchasing a gun.

Andre III turns his pen into a redemptive tool, describing his former street life while lyrically exploring the evolution of his relationship to his father. The subtlety of the author's pain, his literary overlap with his patriarch and his wary forgiveness comprise a thoughtful conclusion—one that involves literally building Dad's coffin. ×××

FROM PAGE 373: "I was a father now. All day and all night of every week of every month of every year since becoming one, I'd felt surrounded by love, responsible to it, careful not to hurt it, and so grateful to get it. To punch another man in the face was to punch another father, was to punch some father's son."

FRESH START

Bina Osteria's latest reinvention is as a neighborhood joint.

581 Washington St., Boston

COMPLETE PACKAGE Grilled whole orata is a simple pleasure.

IT'S NO SECRET THAT BINA Osteria, located in the Ritz-Carlton Residences in Downtown Crossing, has seen its share of changes since it opened a little more than two years ago. Sibling proprietors Babak Bina and Azita Bina-Seibel, who also own the wine bar Bin 26 Enoteca and the Persian restaurant Lala Rokh on Beacon Hill, have cycled through four chefs in that time, and the menu and prices have reflected that flux. Although the bright lights and angular architecture remain the same, the cost is no longer astronomical. And the kitchen has tempered its lofty ambitions to match.

The democratic aims of the menu are reflected by the patrons in the dining room. Thurston Howell types, complete with tasseled loafers, share banquettes with sweatpants-sporting theatergoers. To their credit, the owners, one of whom was always present on each of my three visits, greeted everyone with the same degree of warmth and enthusiasm.

Chef Will Foden's spring menu included a dozen stuzzicare ($3 each), which make for excellent starters. The bresaola and melon, in particular, was a delicious contrast of thin slices of salty cured beef over fresh, sweet melon. However, the rustic chicken liver crostini was less memorable. Of the appetizers, the young lettuces salad ($10) was garden fresh, but the accompanying walnut viniagrette tasted overly acidic.

Although it's been two years since chef Brian Konefal helmed Bina's kitchen, there are still diners who rhapsodize about his heady pasta creations. Foden proves himself a worthy successor. His pastas comprise the strongest section of the menu, perhaps owing to his stint as chef de cuisine at Dante. One welcome upgrade from Konefal's days is the enhanced portion size, a boost reflected in the stracci ($24), chestnut-pasta rags with a lamb ragu, ricotta salata, pea puree and mint. Roughly textured, the dish was a hearty, no-nonsense affair that would shine on a cold evening. The squid-ink tagliatelle ($23) was strong on fish flavor but light on the promised cuttlefish and clams. My favorite, though, was the malfatti ($18), large dumplings of spinach and ricotta with shaved pecorino, brown butter and sage. Tasting like a cross between an air-light gnocchi and the savory stuffing of a ravioli, I only wished there were more than five per order.

New to the spring menu is the carni primitivo section, which offers a selection of grilled and roasted pork or sirloin served with polenta and a choice of side (potatoes, carrots, snap peas or asparagus). I tried the porchetta ($28), a technically time-consuming dish that nevertheless arrived underseasoned. Of the secondis, the standout was the grilled whole orata ($26), a Mediterranean bream wrapped in escarole, served simply with lemon and green olive oil. Expertly deboned and served whole, head included, the clean, fresh flavor profited from Bina's restrained approach to seasoning. A roasted Cornish game hen ($21) proved solid, but lacked pop (a woman next to me asked for salt, and for once, I wish I had too). Its accompanying mini-cast-iron crock of pancetta-and-liver stuffing, however, was singed past repair.

Affogato

Bina's wine list is currently in transition, and the owners have taken over the reins while they search for a new beverage manager. Although the selection shows enviable breadth, inquiries about whether bottles were available next door at the shop, Bina Alimentari, prompted a few confused looks from the wait staff. But the Apollonion "Valle Cupa" Salento Rosso ($50) paired nicely with the robust pasta dishes.

Or skip the wine and take your beverage as a dessert, instead. The affogato ($10), a delicious Italian shake, piled hazelnut gelato, espresso granita and vanilla zabaglione in a mug rinsed with Pernod, lending it a subtle licorice note. Satisfying, simple, yet nuanced—a clear example of what Bina is at its best. ✖✖✖

CAP AND FROWN

A commencement speech for our times

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

HEY, COLLEGE SENIORS! You guys having fun? You ready to throw down? Summer's here, classes are just about wrapped up, and you don't have a care in the world. Well, except for that one thing about getting a job and supporting yourself and forging a career in the unforgiving crucible of the modern, globalized, post-recession job market. But other than that, it's party time, bro!

As a wizened survivor of college graduation, I feel it's my duty to impart some wisdom to you starry-eyed youngsters. Right now, you may feel like you're graduating at the absolute worst time. Rest assured, you're right. You would've been much better off in the class of 2004. Or maybe the class of 2014. But right now? Yeesh. I just did a job search on Monster.com, and there was only one organization with an opening. And it was Al Qaeda.

But don't worry, none of your peers have jobs, either. I graduated into one of the hottest economies in history, and at the moment we were handed our diplomas, only one of my friends had work lined up. And your first job after college is like your high-school sweetheart—seemingly important at the time, but probably not part of your long-term plans. Speaking of which, when an interviewer asks where you see yourself in five years, don't say, "In prison." Unless you're interviewing for a job at a prison. You go to enough interviews, you learn little tricks like that.

Assuming you're among the majority of seniors with no encouraging prospects, you've got a few options for the coming year. First of all, you can punt on the issue and head to grad school. I don't recommend this course of action. I never went to grad school myself, but I think that if you're going to return to school, you should wait until you're much older than everyone else. Then it'll be super funny when your hologram professor tells you to turn your holobook to section pi, and you pull out your Texas Instruments TI-82 and go, "Hey, leggo my Eggo!" I think I just wrote the proposal for the next Zach Galifianakis movie.

Your next option is to take a year off. Beware: Taking a year off can often lead to taking a decade off. At first, your friends are really jealous that you're bartending in East Timor while they're slaving away at a full-time job. Then you're tuning skis in Montana while they're getting promoted. Then you're leading whitewater rafting trips in Norway while they're getting promoted again. Eventually you die in a shark attack off the coast of South Africa. The lesson: Never be a free spirit.

> You could do what I did—move back in with your parents while halfheartedly looking for a job.

You could also start your own company. Maybe you have an idea for a business, but everyone says it's stupid. That's great, because these days all the hottest companies are stupid. Zynga, the company that created Farmville, is worth $10 billion, and their business plan is predicated on people spending real money to buy imaginary sheep. Think of an idea stupider than that, and you might be the next tech mogul. (More bad news: It's impossible to come up with something stupider than that.)

The stupid beverage business, however, is still wide open. Combining alcohol and caffeine seems to be a no-no, but what about alcohol and aspirin mixed with lightly carbonated guava juice? You could call it Guava Lava. There you go. You can have that. You're welcome.

Finally, you could do what I did—move back in with your parents while halfheartedly looking for a job. Sure, there's the glamour of free laundry, but eventually you'll want to head out on your own. And when you do, you'll find that college isn't really over. You'll have no money, so you'll live with roommates (just like college). Because you live with roommates, you'll spend a lot of time hanging out and playing video games (just like college). And because many of your friends are in the same predicament, you'll regularly get together and have house parties (just like college). By any reasonable definition of emotional maturity, you'll still be a college student until at least 2017.

So don't get too stressed about the coming months. And when you're at a job interview and they ask where you see yourself in five years, say "In a mirror that's also a time machine." Because why not? You probably aren't getting that job anyway. You may as well crack open a Guava Lava and raise a toast to the class of '11. Just be careful not to cut yourself, because that stuff really thins your blood. Which you'll need to sell, starting next month. ✖✖✖

WINNING FORMULA

This year, Ainge failed chemistry.

IF WE'RE HONEST WITH ourselves, we have to admit we saw this coming. Just like the Big Three before them, Paul Pierce, Ray Allen and Kevin Garnett have grown old right before our eyes.

The aging Celtics couldn't keep pace with the Miami Heat and were unceremoniously expunged from the playoffs in the second round. Their window of championship opportunity isn't closed, but this year's squad suffered a fatal blow.

Which brings me to the idea of chemistry and Celtics president Danny Ainge.

Mind you, I'm a fan of the Celtics prez. All the success the team has enjoyed the past four years is due, in no small part, to his vision and maneuvering. In 2007 the organization was chopped liver, and Ainge turned it into prime rib.

But then he got a little greedy, or maybe just a little too full of himself. By trading Kendrick Perkins to Oklahoma City, Ainge thought he could fiddle with the present while preparing for the future. What he did, however, was mess with the Celtics' chemistry.

Chemistry is one of those words that gets thrown around a lot in the sports world, and its importance isn't always clear. In a baseball clubhouse, a pitcher and a right fielder can be mortal enemies, but as long as one guy throws strikes and the other puts up numbers in the batter's box, no one cares if they don't carpool on the way home.

But other sports are different, and individual performances can't always carry the day. Take football. If you don't have 53 players all on the same page, you're doomed to failure. Success in football requires unity. The same is true for basketball.

Sure, you need a superstar or three to win. You need individuals who can shoot, pass and defend. But what the Celtics—really, Red Auerbach—have taught us over the years is that winning basketball is team basketball.

You need chemistry to score consistently. You need trust to play the type of team defense that's crucial to contend for a title.

The Celtics boast 17 championship banners. And we know that while legends like Bill Russell, John Havlicek and Larry Bird are the cornerstones of that proud history, the thing that set the greatest teams apart was chemistry.

The Big Three doesn't have a lot of time left. The end is near, and this season was the time to strike.

I don't have a crystal ball or a hot tub time machine, so it's impossible to predict how this season would have turned out had Perkins remained manning the middle for the C's. But I can tell you that the team had its struggles without its silent enforcer, the intimidator who met every opponent driving into the lane with a body like a brick wall and a permanent scowl etched on his face.

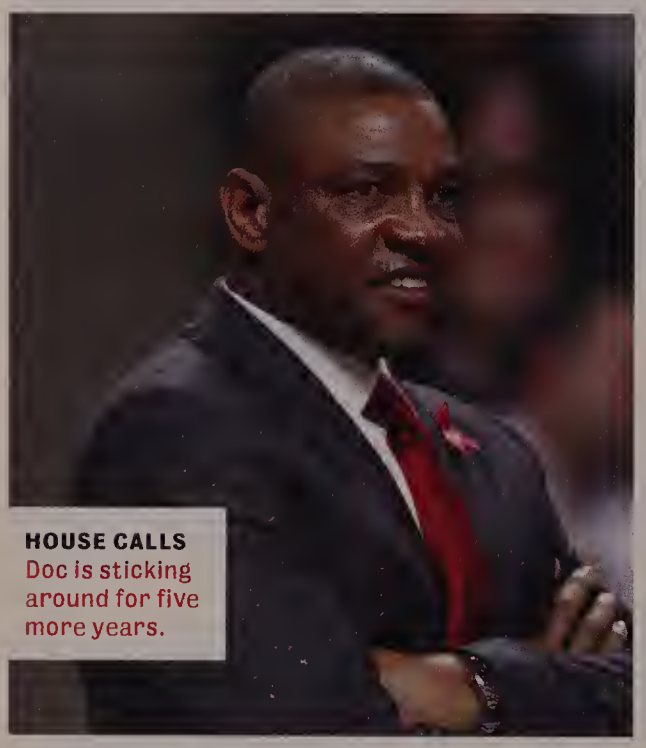
If Perkins hadn't gotten hurt last June, the Celtics would have beaten the Lakers in the finals. So, why—why, why, why—disrupt something that was clearly working? Why worry about 2012 when you're so well prepared for 2011?

I understand that it's a general manager's job to always look ahead (see the draft-pick stockpiling Bill Belichick), but when it comes to this year's Celtics, looking ahead meant losing sight of what was really possible. The current incarnation of the Big Three doesn't have a lot of time left. The end is near, and now was the moment to strike.

I realize Perkins was a goner after this season. The Celtics owners weren't willing to fork over the extra $3 million per year that Perkins wanted, so Ainge took a risk and created a new roster. On paper, there was possibility. Reality proved that things had changed too much.

Of course, Perkins isn't the second coming of Robert Parish. There are no all-star games in his future. But he's a great teammate, he knows his job and he executes. So this new Celtics team missed his presence after the February trade.

In so many ways, Perkins was at the center of the Celtics' success, and both his performance and his demeanor were key to their winning chemistry. Will the new formula work? We'll find out next year. But one thing is for certain: this wasn't the season to start experimenting. ×××



TAKE 5

The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON SEGUIN, GREEN AND A PIMPIN' BELICHICK

HOUSE CALLS
Doc is sticking around for five more years.

5 FINAL CELTICS THOUGHTS

Wounded Soldiers With news of Doc Rivers' postseason throat surgery, it's now official: There were zero healthy bodies in the Celtics' playoff locker room. And while I guess you could blame bad luck, I'm not so sure. I mean, wasn't that the risk of compiling a roster born predominantly during the Fillmore administration?

Return of the Doc Before anyone could get too upset about the massacre in Miami, Rivers swooped in and shocked the world. Not just in that he decided to come back, but that he committed for five years! Sure, there were 35 million reasons why Doc would have been crazy to walk, but I never thought he'd outlast the Big 3. What's next: Belichick sticking around after Brady?

The Verdict Is In Here's my final take on the Perk trade: Would he have helped them beat the Heat? Probably not. But there's no question the Celtics were never the same team after he left. Sure, maybe Perk hasn't set the world on fire in OKC, but Jeff Green had a lot to do with why the Celtics went down in flames.

Speaking of Mr. Green I'm not sure if Danny Ainge owns a pair of Bad Idea Jeans, but for some reason he suggested that the C's might be better with Paul Pierce coming off the bench next year. It's a crazy plan and will only cause more problems for a team trying to rekindle their chemistry. Remove the jeans, Danny!

So, What Will Next Year Bring? Obviously, they're going to take one more crack with the Big Four and friends, but will that be enough to hang with Miami and Chicago? My instincts say no, but this team has a history of making naysayers look stupid. The key is picking up a few younger, complementary pieces… or enough assets to trade for Austin Rivers on Draft Night 2012.

4 DATES TO WATCH

5/25: If necessary, it's Game 6 between the Bruins and Lightning. Only question: Is Tyler Seguin in the Hall of Fame yet?

6/1: Time for the annual Scripps National Spelling Bee, where the only word they can't spell is "iodsfhdsnk." (It has no country of origin and has never been used in a sentence.)

6/6: It's the MLB Draft! Which marks the first time an exclamation point has ever been used in conjunction with the MLB Draft.

6/7: The Sox and Bombers are back at it in the Bronx, where the Yankees will honor one of their all-time greats by burying Jorge Posada in Monument Park.

SEND FEEDBACK TO RICH@IMPROPER.COM AND READ MORE AT CSNNE.COM.

2 MONEY SHOTS

Getting Paper According to Forbes, Phil Jackson's retirement leaves our very own Bill Belichick as the richest coach in sports… and I guarantee it goes straight to his head. Can't you just see BB showing up to camp this year in a fully sleeved sweatshirt, a clean pair of cargos, maybe even a new whistle? You know, just to say, "What up, bitches?"

And a Little Bit More On Doc The craziest thing about Doc's new contract is how adamant he was earlier in the season about needing a break from coaching, and how essential it would be for him to recharge his batteries. Not that you can fault a guy for taking all that cash, but five years is a long time.

3 REMAINING SOX CONCERNS

THINGS ARE LOOKING BETTER, EXCEPT…

Killer Crawford Enough, Carl! Seriously. I'm your last friend here, and I'm not asking for much. A little hitting streak? Maybe a few home runs? OK, how about this: Next time you see J.D. Drew in the clubhouse, just rat-tail him for me. One solid, DL-inducing rat tail and we'll be even for the $20 mil. Come on, just do it!

Lost Lackey For a second, it looked like John Lackey might turn things around… until he veered off course and flew right off an emotional cliff. There are aspects of this story that go far beyond baseball, so I won't joke around. Let's just hope he finds a happy place, for the Sox' sake and his own.

Dustin for Prints He's still one of the most likable guys on the team, so it sucks to have to say this, but what the hell's wrong with Dustin Pedroia? Or maybe I should say: Let's hope there's something wrong with Dustin Pedroia! There needs to be a good reason why the Laser Show's gone the way of Halley's Comet.

1 ONE SHINING MOMENT

My deadline screwed with Bruins coverage again, but Tyler Seguin's performance in Game 2 transcends stupid deadlines. We'll all remember it as Seguin's breakout game—the night he became a star. On the other hand, for Dwayne Roloson it's a memory that will give him a blinding case of diarrhea.

“MLS has grown into an outstanding, competitive league.”

Soroff On BENNY FEILHABER

The New England Revolution midfielder talks about his viral video, snaking the ball and Leo Messi.

NEW ENGLAND REVOLUTION STAR BENNY FEILHABER, 26, was born in Brazil to a Brazilian mother and Austrian father. When he was six, his family moved to Westchester County. He attended UCLA, after which he was tapped to play in the 2005 FIFA World Youth Championship in the Netherlands. He began his professional career in Germany playing for Hamburg, signed with Derby County in the U.K. and then with the Danish team AGF. He played on the U.S. national squad in last year's World Cup. This year, he returned home to play Major League Soccer.

Jonathan Soroff: Are Brazilians intrinsically sexy?
Benny Feilhaber: I think so. I don't know about me, but if you go there, you'll see it on the beach or on the dance floor. They seem to have that aura.

How do you feel about your heartthrob status?
I didn't realize I had one. Doesn't every player get his own set of fans? But if I do, I certainly don't mind it. It's always good to have publicity one way or another, and I'm sure my girlfriend would get a kick out of that.

Country with the best soccer fans?
Germany. I played there for two years, and the fans in Hamburg were just amazing.

What's the likelihood of the U.S. winning the World Cup someday?
Small. It's small for every country, but especially for us because we don't have the same soccer history as other countries.

Have billionaire team owners like Roman Abramovich ruined the game?
No. It's good for the players for the bosses to have money. That's how we get paid. So if the guy wants to spend his money on the team, I think it's good for the game.

Your Chris Brown/Jordin Sparks video has become a viral sensation. Any regrets?
No, but it wasn't supposed to be public. It's funny in retrospect, but at first, I was devastated that it got out. A buddy of mine asked all his friends to post a video on Facebook, and no one was doing it. So he said to me, "If you do it, people will follow." So I agreed, thinking only his friends could see it. Anyway, I was in China at the Olympics, and I was going to bed, so I made it and posted it. The next day, I had over 100 messages and comments. It was already on soccer blog websites.

Will you be at the next Jordin Sparks concert?
It's funny. I went to a Celtics/Miami Heat game, and Jordin Sparks sang the national anthem. I thought maybe she'd invite me up to sing with her, but no such luck.

Player you most admire?
Nowadays, I'd say it's Leo Messi [the Argentinian who plays for Barcelona]. I think what he can do with the ball is just unbelievable. He's got to be the best player in the world right now.

Is it a letdown to play in the U.S. after playing in Europe?
Definitely not. I'm really happy to be back in the States and playing MLS. Since I first made the decision to go to Europe to play, MLS has grown into an outstanding, competitive league.

Thing you'd most like to see change in MLS or the soccer culture in general in the U.S.?
The thing you always think of is it being comparable to the other big sports in terms of fan appreciation, TV and whatnot.

Three things you can do with your feet that I can't.
I can strike a ball from the top of the 18 and hit the crossbar. I can snake a ball, where your foot looks like it's made out of rubber, and in one movement you touch the ball with both the inside and outside of your foot… and I can moonwalk.

Most unconventional use of a soccer ball?
As a pillow. I just moved into my apartment and don't have my furniture yet, so I basically just lie on the floor and use a soccer ball as a pillow while I watch TV.

Thing that hurts the most after a game?
My ankles. They're the most beat-up part of my body. But even worse is the fact that I always have trouble sleeping after a game. It's more annoying than painful.

Any superstitions?
There are times when the team's on a good run or I'm on a good run, I'll try not to change a couple of things…

Hopefully not your underwear.
[Chuckles.] That's gross. But I remember last year, I grew a mustache and then all of a sudden I was on a run where I scored like six games in a row, so I thought I couldn't shave it off. By the fourth game I was just hoping I didn't score, so I could get rid of it.

Do soccer players have the best asses of any pro sport?
Oh, definitely. We're the fittest, or close to, out of any sport. Some other sports might have better upper bodies, but the lower body's definitely ours.

Could you play any other pro sport?
I definitely can't play basketball because I'm no good at shooting. I can't skate, so I can't play hockey. I'd love to be able to play football, but I'm too small, although I was always the best in pick-up games. And in Little League I wasn't very good at hitting, so if I played baseball, they'd have to make up a new position, like designated fielder.

If you were an animal what would it be and why?
A dog. I like to get along with everybody, and I'm super-friendly.

Which is faster: you or the MBTA at rush hour?
I'm probably faster than the T at rush hour, but I don't think I could outrun a train at full speed.

Could you outrun a mountain lion or a bear?
Definitely. I'm way faster than those two.

How do you get Americans to watch a sport where the score can stay zero to zero?
Maybe come up with something like the female fans get to vote on one of the players taking his shirt off at the end, so they'll stay tuned in. ✖✖✖

THE ELEMENTS OF STYLE

A recovering slob reflects on the act of wearing clothes.

BY ANDREW RIMAS

Two weeks ago, I attended a swish awards ceremony in New York. Nearly 500 journalists, publishers and texting creatures from every stratum of the editorial food chain were there, stewing in pinot and nervous tension. In Boston, they would have had an aura of noticeable frump, but even in the glamorous crackle of New York, a writing crowd leans dowdy.

They wore dark suits and a thick coating of facial hair; only some of the wilder documentarians skirted the edge of daring by means of waistcoats. Looking over my wine glass, I watched a well-known restaurant critic flapping around the tables, his hands brushing at navy-clad backs and shoulders, his face leaning in for gusts of bonhomie. He wore a checkered J.Crew English-knit shirt with mother-of-pearl buttons, costing about $110.

"Wanker," I thought. I owned the same shirt myself.

I was dressed in a striped gray linen suit, cut snug in the seat, with a roaring pink shirt and a tie the color of fresh, sliced tongue. This was a departure from my accustomed root vegetable aesthetic—most of my past outfits looked sewn from potato skins. The reason for this newfound dandyism was, of course, existential. I had lately seen white hairs in the mirror, so I tried to compensate by buying shirts with mother-of-pearl buttons. Wanker.

For 37 years I had doggedly ignored the precepts of style—mismatching belts to shoes, shoes to outfits, outfits to anatomy (of course, rejecting style is arguably a stylistic choice itself; a very irritating logical trap). I had always sneered at men who aspired to anything more finicky than wearing pelts. In fact, I always kind of wished I could just walk around in a pelt, like a minked-up socialite or a Viking berserker. But it's probably hell to get wine stains out of bearskin, so I wore a lot of Gap jeans.

When I discovered metrosexuality, five years after the last recorded use of the word, I realized that I had to do some research. If I didn't want to look like I'd fallen out of a Goodwill dumpster, I needed guidelines. Here's what I learned:

STYLE IS NOT FASHION.

This may come as a surprise to slobs like myself whose concept of grooming ends with the services offered by a kennel, but who are dimly conscious that Gisele Bündchen exists. Style is distinct from fashion. It means how to wear pants well, rather than answering whether pants are necessary at all. To wit: the ancient Romans used to think that trousers were only for girls. Real men wore tunics or kilts, and, for formal occasions, a complicated wrap, like a sari. The sight of, say, Pompey the Great in pants would have been the equivalent of President Obama stepping out in a summer frock. Point being, fashion is meaningless if you wait 2,000 years. (Exception: Leather, which always has fans of a certain disposition.)

FASHION IS NOT MEANINGLESS.

"I would define fashion as a look or style that's popular during a period of time," says Pamela Parmal, David and Roberta Logie Curator of Textile and Fashion Arts at the MFA and the power behind the current Arnold Scaasi exhibit. "Changing fashions have to do with economics, with social and cultural factors." She cites the trickle-down theory of couture. In the past, the upper classes set fashions that were then copied by the less fortunate, who ruined them. So the snobs needed to invent replacement fashions, like whale-bone girdles or flapper dresses. Thusly the cycle of weirdness and ignominy continued, until about 50 years ago.

"Fashion today is what you make of it," adds Parmal. In the first half of the last century, Paris set styles that everyone followed, but by the '60s, young people had enough purchasing power to dress against the modes of their parents. They supported new boutiques, and new subcultures emerged. "College-age women wear Uggs," observes Parmal. "Hermès bags appear on Park Avenue. And curators wear black."

BEAUTY IS ETERNAL, FASHION IS NOT.

An editor at another lifestyle magazine told me about studies showing that babies, no matter their origin, are attracted to faces that show symmetry and sexual dimorphism. Human beauty, arguably, is universal. This applies to bodies, too. "Even if you look at the figures in Rubens," she said. "They're not all that radically different from what we consider beautiful today." True, the ancient Greek statue of the Venus Braschi is still recognizably attractive after thousands of years, but this is only because she's naked. If she showed up flouncing around in an Attic chiton, Clinton Kelly would likely shoot her.

REMEMBER THAT STUFF ABOUT HOW WE SHOULDN'T BE DEFINED BY SKIN COLOR? WRONG.

"Color tones are so important," says designer Daniela Corte, Boston's answer to Isabel Marant. "Some people look better in certain colors. Black girls look smashing in some colors, like white. Or light blue on a blonde." When Corte designed a mass-produced maternity piece, the shades with the broadest appeal across skin tones and hair color were steel blue and violet. Yellow, evidently, is one of the hardest colors to match to a human being without resorting to Photoshop.

In a previous life, I must have been either a farmer or a vole, since I always favored shades of mud, especially deep, peaty black. This made for a fun contrast with my peaches-and-cream-and-bleach complexion, and allowed me to accentuate any chance pimples.

DON'T LISTEN TO EUROPEANS.

My Spanish brothers-in-law are both handsome, immaculately groomed and considered dapper even by Euro standards. In the summer, they wear pastel-colored canvas shoes with thick rope soles—which happen to look exactly like fairy slippers. Just saying.

BOSTON ISN'T MILAN.

It's cold, and we're Puritans. Accept it. "Toned-down colors, traditional lines," says Corte. "One of my best-selling colors is gray." Of course, this is only because she doesn't have a line with the Red Sox logo. Then she'd be able to move millions of units of preposterous junk, like pink hats and dog sweaters.

DO WHAT FEELS GOOD.

Were I an eider duck, I would waddle around the breeding rocks displaying my pale green nape. If a female responded by calling "ah-oooo," I'd feel pleasantly validated, maybe even a little full of myself. Same thing goes for Italian shoes. Millions of informed shoppers may disagree, but to me, style means plumage. And pretty feathers draw compliments, which is a good enough reason to flaunt them. ×××

Chances Are You've Been Sitting on a Cure for Cancer

Before Lance, even before LeMond, raised cycling awareness in America, it was the Pan-Mass Challenge that implanted the "a-thon" into this nation's consciousness. Since 1980, the PMC has raised $303 million for Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. This summer, more than 5,000 PMC cyclists will raise $34 million, 100 percent of which will go to cancer research and treatment.

Are you ready to take the Pan-Mass Challenge?

AIR BRUSHING

ABANDONING THE TIRED tropes of security guards, entrance fees and walls, the second annual Figment exhibit appears on the Rose Kennedy Greenway on June 4. Billed as a "large scale collaborative artwork," more than 70 participants have contributed their visions to this conceptual takeover of public space. More radical than any abstract lump of papier-mâché, though, is the festival's outright ban on commerce. Vendors and advertisements are unwelcome, encouraging visitors to open their senses, not their wallets. MATT NANNIS

Figment runs June 4, 11 am-7 pm; June 5, 11 am-6 pm, Rose Kennedy Greenway, Boston, boston.figmentproject.org.

The Beaver ★★ ½ Director Jodie Foster's low-budget labor of love grapples sincerely with mental illness in a patently absurd context. It doesn't quite work, but provides a cinematic exorcism for the public's increasingly conflicted relationship with Mel Gibson. It also gives a platform for one of his most indelible performances. Gibson stars as a clinically depressed basket case. After a comically disastrous suicide attempt, he discovers a beat-up puppet in the garbage. Spontaneously, he concocts a radical form of therapy in which he'll only communicate through the puppet, which just so happens to snarl in the cadence of Gibson's Edge of Darkness costar Ray Winstone. It's a depressive's dream, the chance to start everything all over again with a new, unaccountable identity. What's impressive is Foster's ardent insistence that there are no quick fixes and easy outs. This should be common sense, but it's positively startling to hear from a Hollywood movie. Good intentions, plus Gibson's stunning performance, go a long way toward damming up The Beaver's obvious flaws. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Fast Five ★★★ The most awesomely stupid and stupidly awesome movie I've seen in ages, this fifth installment in the apparently never-ending automotive porn series sends the entire gang to Rio and reunites almost every not-dead player from the entire franchise to pull off an Ocean's Eleven–style heist on a Brazilian crime lord. Bloated and egregiously overlong, director Justin Lin's spectacle piles on one insane set-piece after another, culminating in a symphony of mass destruction that violates every law of physics with bravura showmanship. It was a brilliant move to bring in Dwayne Johnson as a nemesis, since he and Vin Diesel look like 'roided-out, bald doppelgängers competing to out-testosterone one another. It's all very sweaty, homoerotic and violent, but then I've always been a sucker for this sort of muscle-head naïveté. Lin is one of the few guys working who can make gargantuan action sequences spatially comprehensible, and for all its goofiness, the picture's climax had me kicking my feet with joy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hesher ★★ I'm beginning to worry about all those kids who grew up not realizing Fight Club was a satire. Director Spencer Susser's debut feature boasts a barn-burning performance by the talented young actor Joseph Gordon-Levitt, who has come a long way since 3rd Rock From The Sun. Starring as the titular head-banger, he's a chain-smoking, beer-swilling id monster, typically seen shirtless and wasted. He bulldozes his way into crashing with a grief-stricken preteen (Devin Brochu) and his chronically depressed widower dad (Rainn Wilson). For a while it's all in good fun, as Hesher flouts conventional manners, beats the crap out of bullies and misbehaves to Metallica riffs. Unfortunately, Susser and co-writer David Michôd take a sharp left turn into maudlin, as this swaggering Tyler Durden stand-in magically heals the family's pain, makes the world a better place and even loosens up a stuffy, witless grocery store clerk (an awful Natalie Portman) with some heavy metal boot-knocking. Despite all the naughty posturing, Hesher has the saccharine heart of an after-school special. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Jane Eyre ★★ There have been at least 12 big-screen adaptations of Charlotte Brontë's 1847 novel, as well as another dozen or so made for TV. Is there anything more we can gain from yet another couple hours with Jane and Mr. Rochester? Director Cary Joji Fukunaga's take is respectful, for the most part adequate and, as far as I can see, has no compelling reason to exist. Fukunaga attempts to shake up the text with some rough-hewn naturalism, fixating on the Derbyshire landscapes and overplaying the miserable weather. The shots are handheld and often underexposed, announcing from the outset that this isn't your mom's Jane Eyre. Except it really is. Once you look past the shaky-cameras and ugly costumes, there's nothing new. Luckily, Michael Fassbender is there to liven things up as the moody Rochester. Wearing unfortunate, pubic-looking sideburns, this wry Irish actor plays up the character's lazy contempt for everyone in his company. But Mia Wasikowska's Jane just blandly stands around, suffering from Fukunaga's ugly natural lighting and deliberately drab color scheme. (At Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Meek's Cutoff ★★★★ Set in 1845 and loosely inspired by actual events, director Kelly Riechardt's austere, shattering story from the Paleolithic cave art gets the Werner Herzog treatment.

Cave of Forgotten Dreams ★★★
Directed by Werner Herzog. At Boston Common and Coolidge Corner.

"WE WERE HERE," those Paleolithic folks might well have scrawled on the walls of France's Chauvet cave.

The ever-eccentric documentarian Werner Herzog reaches back in time some 32,000 years with Cave of Forgotten Dreams. First discovered in 1994, the cave contains the oldest known example of early man seeking to record his experiences. Sealed in limestone and forbidden to visitors save for a few four-hour windows during the day, it's an archaeological treasure trove that the filmmaker uses as a jumping-off point for cosmic musings.

Herzog is a special case. Ever since 1972's brilliant Aguirre, The Wrath of God, this slightly loony Bavarian filmmaker has devoted his career to chronicling man's struggle against nature and his environment. For his 1982 epic Fitzcarraldo, Herzog enacted his own hero's quixotic attempt to drag a steamship over a mountain, without aid of special effects. The making of the film turned out to be more interesting than the movie itself and was notoriously chronicled by director Les Blank in the spellbinding documentary Burden of Dreams. A love of Herzog used to be a sort of secret handshake for die-hard film buffs. It was a common party trick to imitate his placid, often absurd narrations of the imponderable.

But with 2005's astounding art-house smash Grizzly Man, Herzog hit the mainstream in a big way. Indeed, the film is the only one for which I can recall a director's credit being applauded at the Kendall Square Cinema. Herzog seems to cultivate his reputation as a pleasant oddball, and his droll outlook earned him a guest spot on The Simpsons. He famously pulled Joaquin Phoenix from a burning car, and was, just as memorably, shot by a pellet gun during a BBC interview. "It is not a significant bullet," he mused. "I am not afraid."

Encounters at the End of the World brought Herzog his first Oscar nomination in 2009, a tremendous delay considering he directed 40-odd films beforehand. That peculiar and wonderful picture was a loving chronicle of bizarre characters living in the Antarctic, and it showed the unique kinship between the filmmaker and his subjects. A similar obsessive streak turns Cave of Forgotten Dreams into more than the dry History Channel documentary it sometimes threatens to become.

What really captivates Herzog—and his zeal is contagious—is witnessing early man's attempt at visual expression.

Shot in 3-D, the movie explores the Chauvet cave and highlights the ridiculous restrictions foisted on Herzog's team when they set out to film it. The breath of tourists had caused mildew and rot, so the French government sealed the cave and limited Herzog to a four-man film crew and a tight shooting schedule. In his effort to capture these early paintings, the director had to rely on a handheld light source and the sparsest collection of camera gear.

I'm not a fan of 3-D. It usually gives me a headache and seems like a cheapjack way for studios to gouge moviegoers out of an extra few bucks. But Cave of Forgotten Dreams is an exception, as Herzog's regular cinematographer Peter Zeitlinger fixates on the odd contours of the stalagmites, utilizing the extra dimension to illustrate themes rather than to play a parlor trick.

As always, Herzog collects a roundup of misfit commentators, including an archaeologist dressed in an Inuit bearskin tunic and a mustachioed fellow who once worked for the circus. There's even a perfumer who lingers around the place, sniffing stuff. But what really captivates the filmmaker—and his zeal is contagious—is witnessing early man's attempt at visual expression. His shticky, florid narration describes these illustrations as precursors to cinema. There's also a segment dedicated to a primitive carving of a women's body, molded from the tusk of a woolly mammoth. It's strangely comforting to learn that even Neanderthals were obsessed with big boobs.

But Cave of Forgotten Dreams can't help feeling like minor Herzog. Not until its final reel does it take flight the way his best pictures do. Here we see that toxic backwash from a neighboring nuclear power plant has spawned a breed of mutant, albino alligators. Their connection to the Chauvet cave is tenuous, but these pale, sickly creatures send Herzog into pontification overdrive. Regarding their strange movements with awe, he wonders aloud about technological destruction, and just what our future might hold. ✖✖✖

Oregon Trail follows three families who broke off from a larger wagon train, taking the advice of Stephen Meek (Bruce Greenwood), a bearded blowhard who claimed to know a shortcut. Decked out in a Buffalo Bill–esque fringe jacket and constantly babbling frontier horse-pucky, he's a parody of cowboy arrogance. Except you won't find any laughs here. Riechardt's film is muted, severe and hardly an audience-friendly experience. In the spirit of Gus Van Sant's Gerry, it's one of those art movies that film critics like because nothing happens. I was mesmerized. Meek's Cutoff is about the day-to-day grind, mundane tasks and the sick, helpless feeling of not knowing where you're going. As supplies run low, there's a mounting sense of queasiness and dread that becomes overwhelming. When the movie was over, I had to go walk it off for a while before I felt like talking to anybody. (At Kendall Square.)

Potiche ★★ ½ This minor diversion from writer/director François Ozon seems conceived mainly as a love letter to his iconic leading lady, Catherine Deneuve. Based on a musty 1970s play by Pierre Barillet and Jean-Pierre Grédy, the film stars Deneuve as a desperate housewife turning a blind eye to her umbrella-tycoon husband's incessant philandering. Everything changes when hubby (a weaselly Fabrice Luchini) is taken hostage by striking workers. Deneuve's Suzanne steps in as CEO to handle the union negotiations and, as it turns out, the old gal's got a knack for business. Ozon eats up the 1977 setting, wallowing in the gauzy colors and tacky fashions, without ever quite committing to the strident women's lib speeches in the original script. He seems more interested in figuring out how many Umbrellas of Cherbourg references he can make, and in indulging Deneuve's seldom-used crack comic timing. Potiche dithers here and yon, with a deliberately dated tinny score and retro camera movements that annoy just as often as they delight. (At West Newton Cinema.)

Scream 4 ★★ ½ In this age of Saw sequels and torture porn, the teen slasher flicks parodied by the snarky late-'90s Scream franchise can't help but feel quaint, which is sort of the point of this belated fourth installment. A long 10 years after the third film, original cast members Neve Campbell, Courteney Cox and David Arquette return to Woodsboro and find a new generation of middling actresses stupidly running up flights of stairs, as a pop-culture-savvy serial killer seeks to "remake" the original picture according to the new rules of Hollywood's incessant reboots. It's a nifty hook that writer Kevin Williamson hasn't quite gotten a handle on, and director Wes Craven seems awfully rusty staging these repetitive stabbings. But then the final third of the movie veers into something rather extraordinary, piling on meta-twists and actively insulting the target audience to the point where you expect the now middle-aged original cast to just tell all these damn kids to get off their lawn. The anger is bracing, and endearing. (In the suburbs.)

Source Code ★★★ A man (Jake Gyllenhaal) wakes up without his memory on a Chicago commuter train to find a hot fellow passenger (Michelle Monaghan) is being overtly friendly. There's also the unsettling reality that someone else's face is staring back at him in the bathroom mirror. Then the whole damn train explodes. Quickly plunged back to a frosty control bunker, video-linked to an even chillier commanding officer (Vera Farmiga), Gyllenhaal's shell-shocked war vet discovers that—thanks to the brain's capacity to retain information after death (plus a quantum physics equation to be named later)—a secret military forensic operation has allowed him to mind-meld with a civilian victim and witness a terrorist attack that took place hours before. What follows is Groundhog Day meets Speed, a star-crossed love story unfolding in eight-minute couplets. Paced like a rocket and unfolding perilously close to real time, Source Code creates a maze in which we want the hero to solve the mystery and save the girl from a tragedy that has already occurred. (At the Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

13 Assassins ★★★ ½ The prolific Takashi Miike is known as the bad-boy of extreme Asian cinema, so the shock (and delight) of his latest work is that it's a classic samurai adventure. The ghost of Akira Kurosowa looms large over the proceedings, setting a ragtag band of noble ronin out to dispose of the shogun's sadistic heir. Miike's clean frames and elegant compositions are an obvious homage to the master, but oddly there are even more DNA samples from Sam Peckinpah's The Wild Bunch—my personal favorite movie of all time and perhaps the reason why this film hit such a sweet spot. Of course, it can only end one way, and Miike does not disappoint. The final 45 minutes consist of a single, astonishingly staged set piece in which a very unlucky Podunk farm town becomes an elaborate booby trap for the baker's dozen versus what appears to be the entire Japanese army. Also, five words: Flaming oxen used as weapons. (At Kendall Square.)

Thor ★★ Marvel Films' construction of a bridge to nowhere moves forward with another mega-budget prequel laying laborious groundwork for next summer's The Avengers. This time we've got Chris Hemsworth as the arrogant Norse god of thunder, banished to Earth by his father (a never-hammier Anthony Hopkins) to learn a little humility. At first glance, Kenneth Branagh would seem an odd choice to direct a superhero movie, but as the oddball cast prances around the gaudy realm of Asgard in chintzy armor, it's endearing to watch him attack this junk material like it's another one of his Shakespeare adaptations. Hemsworth has a hearty charisma, and the movie's mildly amusing midsection plays like a Viking version of Crocodile Dundee. Asgard's tacky production design owes a debt to Mike Hodges' kitsch classic Flash Gordon, but the guy next to me said it reminded him of a Vegas bathroom. The problem is there's no real weight to any of this stuff. Even the hammer looks like a plastic toy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Win Win ★★★ Writer/director Thomas McCarthy, known for Sundance smashes like The Station Agent and The Visitor, doesn't have a lot of challenging ideas up his sleeve. As far as I can tell, he takes a gimmicky construct and casts it wisely, drawing out fresh performances from underused actors by playing to their strengths in endearing showcase roles. There really isn't anything wrong with the formula. McCarthy's latest stars Paul Giamatti as a schlubby high school coach who accidentally ends up being foster-father to a solemn wrestling prodigy with abandonment issues. Ethical knots abound, paying lip service to troubled times in recession-addled New Jersey, but Win Win truly takes flight whenever it becomes a true underdog sports movie—scoring big laughs from simple three-shots of Giamatti, Jeffrey Tambor and the never-not-funny Bobby Cannavale as beleaguered coaches of the worst wrestling team in the Garden State. McCarthy doesn't ever get a handle on his tale's courtroom histrionics, but the lovable characters and genre payoffs make it a pleasure nonetheless. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

SUMMER RESOUNDS

New England rocks with a bumper crop of festivals.

Michael Weintrob

HISTORICALLY, New England hasn't been a hub for rocking music festivals, but times are a-changin'. Nateva hit Maine with a bang in 2010 only to cancel in this year's crowded field, which includes multi-stage productions practically every weekend.

"People are really looking for places to commune," says Newport Folk Festival producer Jay Sweet. The Essex, Mass. native suggests that online denizens crave real-world shared experiences, and he links the growth of multi-genre festivals to iPod mixes. "We've all become musical omnivores because of the 'shuffle.'"

Indeed, these omnivores can find folk, jazz, blues, zydeco, country and world music along with indie, alternative and jam rock at New England festivals this summer.

Nothing here will equal the scale of Bonnaroo in Tennessee, Lollapalooza in Chicago or even New York bashes like Mountain Jam near Woodstock, Phish's Super Ball IX at Watkins Glen and the Dave Matthews Band Caravan on Manhattan's Governors Island. Instead, New England festivals tend toward musical variety, unique surroundings and a more user-friendly experience.

Here are 10 fests worth attending, selected for their ideal combination of lineup, setting and vibe.

SOLID SOUND FESTIVAL JUNE 24-26
Mass MoCA, North Adams, Mass.
solidsoundfestival.com

For the second time, the Berkshires' contemporary art museum hosts Solid Sound, summer's most creative multi-genre happening. Chicago rockers and festival founders Wilco play alongside the Levon Helm Band, Sonic Youth guitarist Thurston Moore, jazz trumpeter Dave Douglas, soul singer Syl Johnson and Pajama Club joined by Neil Finn. Moreover, festivalgoers can enjoy comedy "curated" by John Hodgman, museum exhibits, films and children's theater troupe performances. Camping enthusiasts even have a tent site within walking distance.

GREEN RIVER FESTIVAL JULY 16-17
Greenfield Community College, Greenfield, Mass.
greenriverfestival.com

GATHERING OF THE VIBES JULY 21-24
Seaside Park, Bridgeport, Conn.
gatheringofthevibes.com

Stop here for a Grateful Dead-style beachside bonanza that nonetheless showcases alt-rockers Jane's Addiction and Elvis Costello & the Imposters, as well as Further, Rhythm Devils, moe., John Butler Trio, Tedeschi Trucks Band and Dr. John.

LOWELL FOLK FESTIVAL JULY 29-31
Lowell, Mass. lowellfolkfestival.org

Oddly the same weekend as Newport Folk, this free event features global acts like blueswoman Shemekia Copeland, Irish group Dervish and Nathan and the Zydeco Cha-Chas.

NEWPORT FOLK FESTIVAL JULY 30-31
Fort Adams State Park, Newport, R.I.
newportfolkfest.net

This is the place where Dylan went electric and the Pixies went acoustic. The granddaddy of Northeast festivals now puts indie rock and roots music on center stage. Expect to see a solo Elvis Costello, Tegan & Sara and gypsy-punk powerhouse Gogol Bordello in rare acoustic appearances alongside the Decemberists (with an expected cameo by Gillian Welch), Emmylou Harris, Mavis Staples and Boston's David Wax Museum, who dazzled last year on the third stage inside the walls of Fort Adams. Mainstage acts play in front of a Newport Harbor panorama.

KAHBANG AUG. 5-13
Bangor, Maine. kahbang.com

Without Nateva, Bangor amplifies its music, arts and film fest by bringing in My Morning Jacket, Grace Potter and the Nocturnals and Atmosphere.

LITCHFIELD JAZZ FESTIVAL AUG. 5-7
Kent School, Kent, Conn. litchfieldjazzfest.com

The same weekend as the Newport Jazz Festival, senior statesmen Roy Haynes and Jimmy Heath, Joe Lovano, Matt Wilson, Vijay Iyer and Trombone Shorty perform in an intimate spot.

NEWPORT JAZZ FESTIVAL AUG. 5-7
Fort Adams State Park, Newport, R.I.
newportjazzfest.net

At the same cool site as the Folk Festival, enjoy performances by Berklee-bred pianist Hiromi and bassist/singer Esperanza Spalding, Wynton Marsalis, sax guru Charles Lloyd with tabla master Zakir Hussain, Afro-pop star Angélique Kidjo and New Orleans' Trombone Shorty.

RHYTHM & ROOTS FESTIVAL SEPT. 2-4
Ninigret Park, Charlestown, R.I. rhythmandroots.com

This Labor Day weekend tradition keeps its Louisiana flavor with Steve Riley and Marcia Ball, while adding alt-country rebel Steve Earle's new band, a solo Richard Thompson, ex-Mavericks frontman Raul Malo and 7 Walkers with Grateful Dead drummer Bill Kreutzmann. There's a dance pavilion that offers lessons and a family stage that hosts a Mardi Gras parade.

LIFE IS GOOD FESTIVAL SEPT. 24-25
Prowse Farm, Canton, Mass. lifeisgood.com

Looming just beyond the summer, the Life is Good fest has become the family-friendly bash that closes out festival season. Last year's lineup included Guster, Ben Harper, Grace Potter and Dan Zanes. ✖✖✖

Mackie Osborne

Revel in Disguise

Extreme Makeover The inventors of sludge rock make Ozzy Osbourne seem angelic. The Melvins, a band conceived in the early '80s, have influenced the noisy music genre for years. Playing off of acts like Black Sabbath and Black Flag, the Melvins defy categorizaton, jumping from fast, hardcore punk riffs to slow, heavy death metal grinds. The group solidified their signature sound on two '90s-era albums: Bullhead, released in 1991, and Stoner Witch, out in 1994. Both capture a dark and heavy sludge sound that exemplifies the band. The Melvins, with new members and a new vibe, play the albums in full at Paradise Rock Club June 3-4.

Mass Historia

Time Warped If a picture says a thousand words, Panopticon Gallery's Discoveries exhibit is a clamorous retelling of history. Eva Timothy, Jesseca Ferguson and Fran Forman revisit, reframe and repurpose photographic ephemera in a way that reimagines the past. Photo-based tableaux, collages and mixed-media works evoke surreal dislocations of time and place. Experience surrealism and historical counter-narratives at the Panopticon Gallery through June 6. Hilary White

Basic Instinct

Mind Over Matter When neuroscientists start talking about the inner workings of the human brain, they spout enough data to confuse even the most astute layman. In Icognito, David Eagleman uses relatable, easy-to-follow examples to break down the subconscious and divulge some of the brain's big secrets. It's the organ that runs the show, and we're just along for the ride. So is it your subconscious or this blurb telling you to check him out at the Harvard Book Store on June 3?

FRIENDS WITH BENEFITS

Nice Backhand

It's one of the world's strange ironies that The Perkins School for the Blind has one of the most beautiful campuses in town. And it's one of Boston's claims to greatness that the school is located here (OK, well, Watertown, but same diff).

Their annual Possibilities Gala drew a big-name crowd, not surprising given that the co-chairs were Corinne Grousbeck (wife of Celtics owner Wyc), Katherine Chapman (wife of Staples founder Tom Stemberg) and Kevin Bright (the executive producer of a little TV show called Friends). Among the high-wattage guests on hand: presidential hopeful Mitt Romney, actor/comedian Lenny Clarke (who recently shot a pilot that's going to be a huge hit), A&E hottie Lynn Hoffman (who confided that her first kiss was with Friends star and fellow Newton native Matt LeBlanc), brunette bombshell Linda Henry and her Red Sox-owning husband, John, concessions gajillionaire Joe O'Donnell and the lovely Kathy, yummy mummy Evelyn Treacy and the dashing Michael, flower czar Ted Winston and the stunning Simone, rapier wit Tom Matlack and the lovely Elena, and so on and so forth.

The evening's entertainment included performances by Perkins students, along with rock legends Peter Wolf and Bob Weir (as in J. Geils meets the Grateful Dead).

However, even more entertaining was when one woman asked another what fillers she was using to get rid of her wrinkles. The answer: "It's called getting fat."

Especially If You're His Wife

It's been described as "the Southie Prom," and the description has merit. The McCourt Foundation Gala, held at the Boston Harbor Hotel, raises money to support Alzheimer's and M.S. research, and the Irish construction dynasty is as salt-of-the-earth as they come. Staff and several hundred friends cut loose like it were St. Patrick's Day, and everything from the food to the music to the guests was completely unpretentious.

On-hand: family rapscallion Ryan McCourt and his gorgeous fiancée, Charity Chamillard, handsome scamp Matt McCourt with his gorgeous wife, Ali, and delightful mother, Ginger, the statuesque Nancy Brady and handsome devil Arjun Maini, Stella owners Evan and Candace Deluty, radio bigmouth Greg Hill, Irish imp Ryan McDonough, laugh riot Amy Gallant Sullivan, and one man who identified himself as "the token fat guy."

Jeff Merselis, Mary Kakas and EJ Zhang at Party on the Harbor

The evening's funniest remark, however, came from the guest who said, "What's the last thing you wanna hear when you're having sex with Willie Nelson? 'I'm not Willie Nelson.'"

One woman asked another what fillers she was using to get rid of wrinkles. The answer: "It's called getting fat."

Night at the Museum

There's no other way to put it: the Institute of Contemporary Art's annual spring gala, Party on the Harbor, is dead sexy.

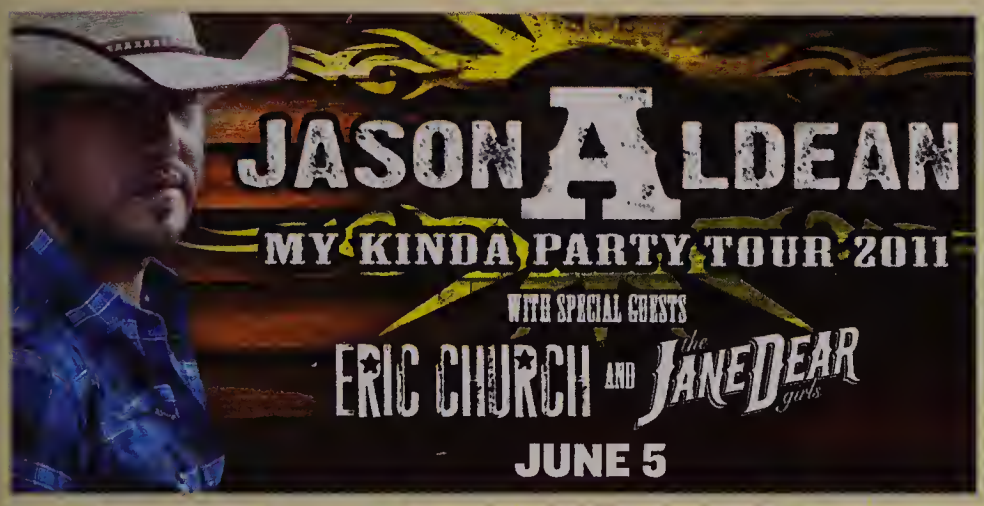
To begin with, it takes place inside one of the city's coolest buildings. Then there's the guest list, which I suspect was deliberately purged of anyone who's not genetically blessed and fashion-forward. For example: leopard printed mountain lioness Mary Kakas, artiste Tristan Govignon, travel mogul Andy Levine, designer extraordinaire Eric Roseff and his handsome husband, Collin Sullivan, incorrigible scamp Mark Bombara and the absurdly good-looking Ben Wood, real estate mack daddy Cliff Long, ubiquitous fashion designer Michael DePaulo, eminent eye surgeon Caroline Baumal and her nightclub-owning other half, Jack Bardy, the unfairly handsome Franklin Ross, blue-blooded party girl Kimberlea Tracey, the sexiest couple on Newbury Street, Michael Tilley and Peter Griglik, über-hotties Jeff Merselis and EJ Zhang, Our Lady of Chanel Mary Nobile King, French Library head honcha Catheline van den Branden, and one guest who said, "Even the straight men here are so hot they look gay."



The cocktails flowed freely, the dance floor was jammed, and by 10 p.m., every hipster within a hundred-mile radius was there. Or, as one woman put it: "You usually have to get jetlag to go to a party this fun." ×××

h, thin crust beneath premium & imported toppings.

Bulk, thick dough beneath processed cheese & canned foodstuffs.

Around here, most people have cultivated a refined taste for pizza. They appreciate the difference between imported cheeses and processed blends. Fresh toppings vs. canned or frozen. And hand-thrown, thin crust vs. bready dough. Who knows? Maybe we even had a hand or two in helping them see the light.

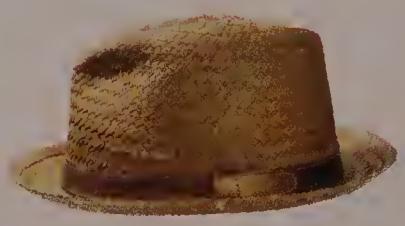
The IMPROPER

I Go Back to August, 1992

In the catalog of tired literary devices, one of the most pernicious is the use of food as a mental trigger. For instance, Proust ruined madeleines for everyone—for eternity—by writing about them as a catalyst for his own boring memories. Likewise, consider the picture to the left of this letter. Now try not to think of grilled dachshunds. Can't be done. In this spirit, then, I'm going to spoil potato salad for everybody, for eternity.



It was a summer afternoon, on a lakeshore rock along the Eibsee in the Bavarian Alps. "Crystalline" is an adjective that's often carelessly applied to water, but the Eibsee somehow mirrors its backdrop of green and jagged white while still holding a translucent sapphire sheen. Sunbathers like to roost in its secluded inlets, so I was picnicking with a merry party of relatives and young ladies from the nearby town of Garmisch-Partenkirchen. A pretty girl handed me a plate of potato salad. The tubers had been roughly chunked with red onions and rosemary, and mustard seeds flecked a vinaigrette that was cunningly laced with bacon. It was a very pleasant moment.

About twenty feet to the left, an elderly gentleman emerged from the pines. He had pale, almost incandescent skin, so he had removed his bathing suit to better absorb the mountain sun. Slowly, and with excruciating care, he inched into the unbroken water, the drape of his elephantine buttocks tensing at the sudden cool. And there he stood, in a scene of natural perfection, quietly dandling his privates.

I have not eaten potato salad since.

THE HOT DOG: a wholesome marriage of disparate parts, often construed as a metaphor for America encased in intestine. Every few days, Trina's Starlite Lounge chef Suzi Maitland rethinks the relationship. A quick julienne for a hot dog banh mi. A turn in the blender et voilà: a charcuterie plate with hot dog pâté. With wieners schnitzeled, beer-battered or topped with kimchi, the "dog of the day" database has swelled to more than 200 versions and growing, as Maitland's imagination runs in step with customer hankerings for the next surprise. Says Maitland, "I find the weirder they are, the more people want to try them." NICK ALTSCHULLER texture and color, doing so with a sophistication most fruit-based cocktails can't muster.

Apertifs now pervade menus around the city, and some bartenders are turning to a grape-based solution to add punch to their creations. Cocchi Americano is the spicier, more bitter sibling to the lightly honeyed Lillet Blanc. Although released just last year, many are heralding Cocchi as the must-have ingredient for an authentic Vesper or Corpse Reviver #2 due to its similarity to the now-extinct Kina Lillet.

Made from Moscato di Asti, the wine is infused with cinchona bark, orange peel and herbs for more bravado and depth. Find it two ways at Oleana: the traditional Italian preparation on the rocks with orange ($6), or in an ISLA ↖ with mint and bitters ($10). They're proof that you'll soon be hearing a bunch about this new cocktail crush.

GRAPES: THEY'RE NOT JUST FORVINO ANYMORE

Once dismissed as the flavor of cough syrups and bottom-of-the-bag Jolly Ranchers, the grape is now becoming the darling of area bartenders. They note its versatility in a cocktail, showing chameleonic qualities that range from cloying to crisp, subtle to stand-out.

Harvest's GRAPE EXPECTATIONS → ($11) uses grape-based Cîroc vodka mixed with white cranberry juice to tone down the syrupy notes. A float of bubbly Moscato d'Asti adds sweetness, effervescence and snap. Garnished with a skewer of frozen grapes, it's a drink that toys with temperature,

Hit Girl

STRIPPED EASE

Natasha Bedingfield is a pop singer and songwriter known for her international hits like "These Words," "Unwritten" and most recently "Strip Me." The Grammy-nominated star brings her Less Is More tour to the Somerville Theatre on June 8.

What's new for this tour?
We're completely stripping it back musically. I've only got three musicians. We're like the Police. [Laughs.]

What's the concept behind your recent album, Strip Me?
It's about letting go of all our obsessions, no matter what they are. I think that message has always been lying under my songs, but now it's really clear.

What was the creative process like?
I came up with the concept before I started writing, so I was trying to stay within that theme. I wrote so many songs that didn't make it onto the album. I'm saving them for the next album, or four albums from now.

A lot of critics say people only write disconnected singles, not albums. Is that true?
Actually, I do agree. That's the new way. People are surprised when you put together a true album.

Do you feel a lot of pressure to keep writing hits?
You feel like a boxer. It's like you're only as big as your last fight. I'm just incredibly grateful for the fans who stick by me. Pop artists have to balance trying to change and adapt to current genres and still staying true. How do you reinvent yourself?

Why have so many of your songs ended up on TV shows and movie soundtracks?
I suppose it's because I write about common desires and frustrations—love, anger, fear. My songs are also pretty narrative, and I think that translates to soundtracks.

Is it fun to collaborate across genres?
The collaboration with Nicki Minaj was amazing. I went to Eminem's studio in Detroit to record my part of the song and I was dead tired, but by the time I finished it felt like a whole new day.

GREENS, EGG AND HAM

Chef Chris Parsons isn't trying to reinvent the classic salade aux lardons, just perfect it. From his Winchester kitchen, he quietly outplays Boston's top brasséries at their own game. Components are key: North Country Smokehouse bacon, diced and perfectly rendered, meets a sunny-side up Maple Meadow Farm egg trimmed of its ragged edges. Rounding out the dish is bitter, frilly frisée lightly coated with a brawny, bacon vinaigrette tarted up with sherry vinegar.

ISLAND TIME

The Straight Wharf team branches out.

CHEFS GABRIEL FRASCA and Amanda Lydon are expanding their reach in Nantucket with the opening of Ventuno, their second restaurant. But Frasca is adamant that this is not the start of a culinary empire. "No, this is the end of one," he laughs. In fact, he was fully content just to be the chef/co-owner of Straight Wharf, but after the chance to move into the former 21 Federal arrived, he realized, "spots like this don't come around very often."

Ventuno has a style that's "completely different" from Straight Wharf's shingled, stark, out-on-the-water sensibility. "We want to continue and amplify the spirit," he explains. Frasca has another mission: "We're trying hard to bring scungilli back," he says, referring to the local Nantucket whelk, which he points out is sustainable and delicious. "I love it in every way, shape and form."

Despite his seeming reluctance, Frasca leaves himself just a little wiggle room on the subject of further expansion. "I've always wanted to have a clam shack, and I'd like to do ice cream, too," he muses. We'll keep you posted.

ASIAN STREET FOOD comes to Roslindale when Seven Star Street Bistro opens at 153 Belgrade Avenue this month. Pork belly—everybody's darling—is served on a mantou bun with pickled mustard greens and peanuts for just $5. Also featured: Vietnamese summer-rolls and chocolate-filled wontons.

TAKING LOCAL TO A NEW LEVEL, Josh Ziskin, the chef/owner of La Morra, forages for stinging nettles at a nearby parking lot in Brookline. "I'm triple-gloving it," reports Ziskin, "I gotta get there before the landscapers do." You'll find the nettles mixed up with morels in a risotto, as La Morra has recently reopened after a kitchen fire closed the restaurant for two months.

BITCH PERFECT

IN RESPONSE TO "BEACON HILL BITCH": Wow. Your comments say it all. You were not in the checkout line, and I highly doubt you were polite. Your "tan, rockin' body" will eventually fade, honey. Especially if you spend a lot of time under UV lights. Girls like the one at the store may always have issues with women like you, but it's not because you're pretty. It's because you're terrible. I suppose personality and charm evade you. Keep on enjoying that "rockin' body" while you still can.

You suck

Also in response to "Beacon Hill Bitch":
I was standing at the customer service counter, and I saw the whole thing. Sorry, Miss Beacon Hill, but you stepped out of line, and not just for a moment. Your cart looked unoccupied. The cashier was waiting to ring up someone's purchases and the woman you described as "fat and frumpy" motioned to the next customer, as she only had one item in her cart. You, a self-righteous monster, felt compelled to justify yourself. Please get the details straight. If your "tan, rockin' body" causes you to act this way, you may want to consider sunscreen with a higher SPF.

Witness to the bitchery

To the late-night motorcycle riders in the North End:
My neighborhood would be so much better if every Hell's Angel douchebag didn't crank the gas as hard as humanly possible, night after night. Look, jerk, it's 2 am on a weeknight. Did it ever occur to you that people might be sleeping? Oh, and the cabbies can stop honking at each other, too. The walls are thin, and so is my patience.

Wine

King of the Hill

Ridge is the gold standard of zinfandel. Begun as a home wine-making project in the 1960s, the West Coast winery has crafted a collection that sets the bar for balance, finesse and intensity of flavor. Their low-potency blends are particularly impressive in a category in which 16 percent alcohol isn't uncommon. Recent vertical tastings of the signature regions, Geyserville and Lytton Springs, proved that the wines are eminently age-worthy; the 1987s, not to mention the 1997s, I tasted were still vibrant and fresh, with juicy, tangy, vigorous red fruit flavors. The secret? Old vines. The more venerable the vines, the deeper the roots and the more access they have to mineral-rich water far beneath the surface. It's something you can definitely taste.

2008 was a drought vintage in California. Wines from that year tend to be quite concentrated and ripe. Geyserville and Lytton Springs are not terribly far apart as the crow flies, but they always show vastly different characteristics, and the outstanding 2008s are no exception.

Ridge "Geyserville,"
ALEXANDER VALLEY, 2008 ($40, MURRAY'S) With delicate floral but also smoky scents, this is a minerally model of well-proportioned zinfandel. It's fresh and juicy with hints of spice and just a touch of tobacco. A lovely accompaniment for roasted fish steaks or herb-rubbed chicken.

Ridge "Lytton Springs,"
DRY CREEK VALLEY, 2008 ($40, UPPER FALLS WINE) Lytton Springs is always slightly more terroir-expressive than Geyserville, with darker, more extracted fruit, greater richness and less acidity. The 2008 shows clove and sage-like aromas, a touch of licorice and blackberry fruit. The finish is all savory minerals. Highly recommended with skirt steak, but make sure to decant.

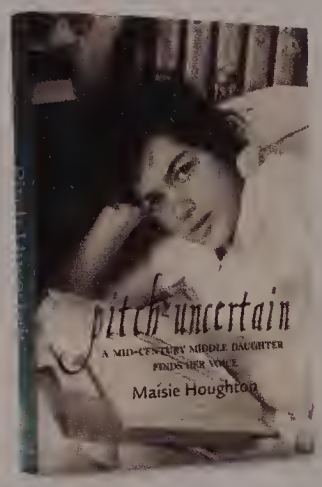
TIMES GONE BY



A remembrance of Cambridge past

AUTHOR MAISIE Houghton's memoir resonates with the many atmospheres of her upper-class, though carefully constrained, childhood in 1950s Cambridge.

Her parents were quietly detached from each other, the mother dutifully domestic, the father a bit of a naughty boy. Not too shackled to work, he pursued fun and clubs with both indulgence and irreverence. Moving through a wide expanse of privilege—summer houses, a swirling social life and silver spoons, actual and metaphorical—the family observed the Cambridge ethos in which "the eccentric individual was the hero."

Throughout her story, Houghton captures feelings and flavors, tablecloths and tankards, colorful "grande dames" and "louche young men" at fancy dress balls. It's a vivid portrait of the jaunty insouciance of that lost world. Her relative, Ruth Draper, was a witty actress whose famous monologues both satirized and paid loving tribute to the class she inhabited.

Pitch Uncertain: A Mid-Century Middle Daughter Finds Her Voice
By Maisie Houghton

The author is from Cambridge.

Cozily married after Radcliffe, Houghton looks back with curiosity and yearning at her father, who died young. He's a puzzle to her, but she reflects on him through rediscovered letters that evoke her formative years with a breath of nostalgic air. ×××

FROM PAGE 43: "Her step on the stairs seemed determined to stamp out the malady, however minor. Shaking the thermometer seemed to take a long time; she peered at the heavy bar of slithering silver, anxiously waiting for it to float to the fragile mark that meant safe, normal, no more worry. Once she shook the thermometer so vigorously it snapped in two. I watched as the sinuous liquid instantaneously dissolved. If my mother was the powerful river permanently embedded in our lives, my father was that shimmering, evanescent mercury, disappearing before you knew it."

THE SKIMMER MAKES A BARTENDER PART CRAFTSMAN, PART ASSASSIN.

Nothing like this weapon of choice seals in the lager's flavor. And with one swipe, it masterfully cuts the top foam. Yes, all froth plays a role, and sometimes that role requires beheading.

BLUE WORLD ORDER

Jason Santos, oft-lauded chef, Hell's Kitchen runner-up and sudden restaurateur, is probably best known for his spiky, electric blue hair. Top trophies collected at local cook-offs like Lamb Jam and the Burrito Bowl might get him some press, but it's the hue of his coif that really draws attention. "There are times when I love getting recognized," he says. "But there are also times when I'm so busy it's like, 'I'm working here.'"

"I JUST WANT TO BE THE MOST FUN."

Recently, that's meant the launch of Blue Inc. His new 50-seat spot, due to open in the "Wharf District" this month, will be a spin on the modern American bar. "It felt like this was the next step and that it was finally the right time," he says.

Formerly Lobby Bar & Kitchen, the space didn't require extensive construction, but it feels like an entirely new venue thanks to a blue-and-orange face-lift from HGTV's Taniya Nayak (wife of Santos' partner, Brian O'Donnell). Floor-to-ceiling windows will open during the warmer months and overlook a patio to splash even more color on the Rose Kennedy Greenway.

Santos' highbrow-meets-Fritos approach turned his previous outpost, Gargoyles on the Square, into a Davis Square destination. He won't wander much from that formula. "We aren't reinventing the wheel," he says. "But there's a lot of surprises in store." That means Buffalo wings made with smoked duck and house-made hot sauce, and Kobe beef corn dogs spiked with cheddar and jalapeño. Desserts by Nicole Harrington, Menton's former assistant pastry chef, update classics like flourless chocolate cake. "I don't care if I'm the best chef in town," he adds. "I just want to be the most fun."

When it came to figuring out what to call his new venture, Santos had some fun of his own. A contest in the Boston Herald asked readers to come up with a name—the winning moniker was suggested by Somerville's Ashley Capone. "It's a good thing I don't plan on changing my hair in the foreseeable future," laughs Santos.

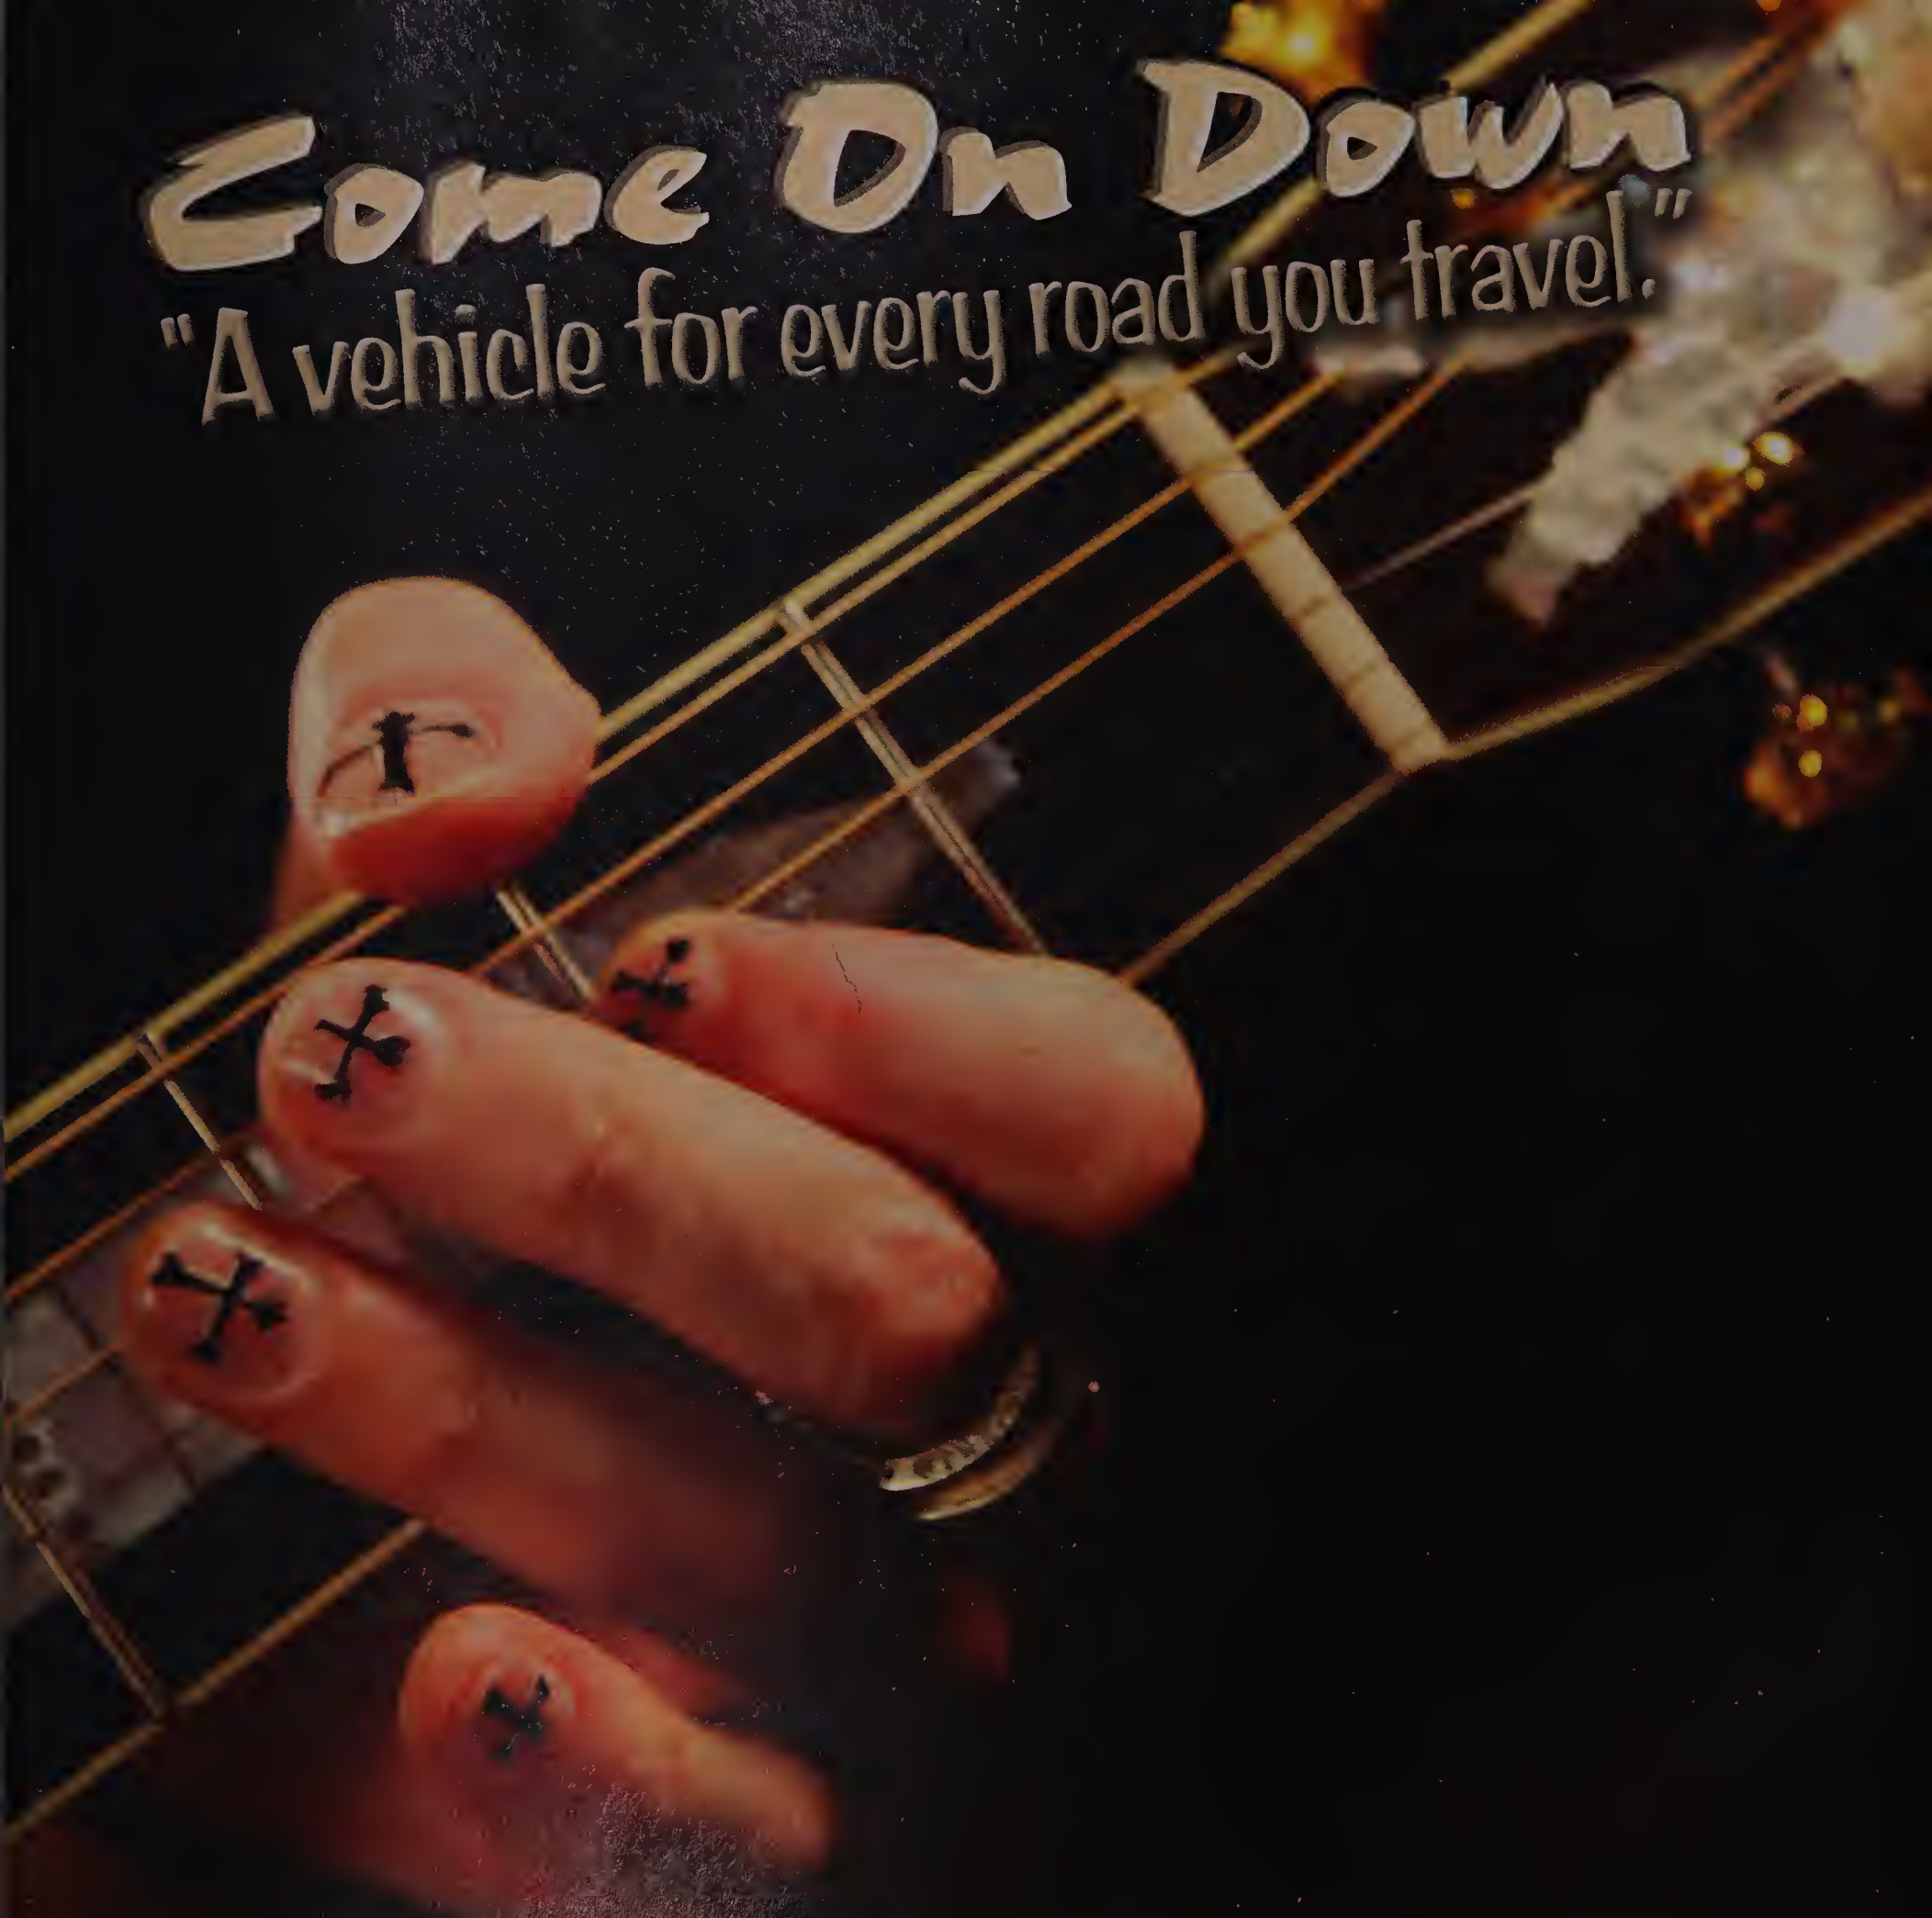
Passing the Bar

Four years ago, he was tending bar in a grass skirt in Hawaii. Today, bar manager Kevin Martin ↑ of Eastern Standard stands as a top-shelf mixologist after coming in first place in the grueling BAR exam—an arduous rite of passage overseen by an educational program called the Beverage Alcohol Resource. Besides conferring bragging rights, BAR's seal of approval gave Martin entry into an elite international corps of bartenders, sommeliers and chefs. "The networking is profound," he says. "It's a bonding among the most important people in the spirits industry."



Martin joins his boss and mentor, Jackson Cannon (bar director of Eastern Standard and Island Creek Oyster Bar), plus Misty Kalkofen, Scott Marshall and Josey Packard of Drink, in the club of Boston-area BAR laureates. The four-day competition, held in New York, draws an annual class of 50 from all over the globe. Entry fees are steep at $3,500, but Martin found a sponsor in Rob Cooper, the St. Germain liqueur importer.

The exam is given in four 12-hour sessions and includes everything from identifying and detailing 160 spirits ("We spit,") to creating an original cocktail, to mixing six drinks in 10 minutes (Martin scored a perfect 100 on the speed section). They're also tested on what concoctions work on a cocktail list. "They gave us a family restaurant menu that included a Sex Kitten drink," Martin recalls. "Duh."

YOUNG AT HEART

It may not look the part, but Lolita offers tasteful cuisine.

Lolita Cocina & Tequila Bar
271 Dartmouth St., Boston
617-369-5609
lolitaboston.com

WELL-TENDED PRAWN Lolita's shrimp ajillo is beautifully prepared.

ILLUMINATION IN THIS subterranean space ranged from dim to dark, and the dining-room decor suggested a late-19th-century bordello, with restrooms a marriage of rococo and gothic. Loud music made conversation difficult. Garlic- and cilantro-laden food had all the refinement and subtlety of Donald Trump. The words of a savage critique began to circle in my mind, but the trouble was, I enjoyed myself too much.

Like Fourth of July fireworks, Lolita Cocina is lively and fun while offering a suggestion of danger. On a first visit with three companions who know their way around food, we ambled widely over the menu, devouring dishes that ranged from good to outstanding (with only one or two unsatisfactory offerings). Generous portions facilitated sharing. Personable waitstaff provided attentive service on all three nights.

To begin, house-made nachos, ultra thin and crispy, put our discipline and restraint to the challenge. With three contrasting salsas—a deliciously tangy tomatillo salsa verde, a dynamite roasted red poblano pepper and a smoky chipotle crema—they reminded me of the old potato-chip slogan: "I'll bet you can't eat just one." Queso fundido ($11), a large ramekin of bubbling hot asadero cheese with nuggets of chorizo, poblanos, mushrooms and cilantro pesto, provided a combination of delightful, assertive flavors. Spicy mahi mahi flautas ($12), flour tortillas wrapped around hunks of fish, roasted corn, jack cheese and poblano and chipotle chiles, arrived with black nacho chips, which added a welcome crunch. Five crispy masa oysters ($11) were lightly floured and dressed in a chipotle-cream salsa.

The sticky spare ribs ($14) nearly struck me dumb, as I muttered "holy mole" while tucking into the hefty pile of pork coated in a luscious sauce rendered from chili powder, coffee beans, chocolate, sesame and orange. Though lacking the necessary ingredients to be labeled an authentic mole, the sauce hit the notes that matter to aficionados: rich, complex, savory flavor with heat balanced by sweetness and a citric edge. Other dishes veered more toward the Tex-Mex tradition. Pulled pork tacos ($12), a touch too tame in the heat department, contrasted with the Baja shrimp tacos ($14), whose fiery spice was offset by avocado and mango. A cheese and spinach quesadilla ($9) rivaled the black-truffle-salsa topped version at Lolita's upscale neighbor, Tico.

MILK MADE Dulce de leche

Principal plates included shrimp ajillo ($24), with huge, well-prepared shrimp on a salad of watercress, avocado and pink onions perked up with lime. The menu described the carnitas ($18) as slow-cooked, but the mammoth hunks of lean pork were underdone and tough. As a garnish, smoky, sautéed greens performed remarkable salvage work. The pollo asado ($18), half a chicken flavored with garlic and roasted to a crisp, juicy turn, arrived with roasted potatoes and a colorful bale of spicy vinegar peppers. Side dishes ($6), called "sanchos," perhaps in allusion to Don Quixote's sidekick, Sancho Panza, included an ear of grilled Zócalo corn brushed with chipotle crema, cotija cheese and black pepper. A bowl of garlicky clay-pot black beans featured epazote, a wild Mexican herb alleged to have certain colonic benefits. Finally, a bowl of woody, tough and flavorless sautéed greens seemed beamed in from a different planet than the veggies accompanying the carnitas.

Beverages included an exhaustive selection of tequilas, a more modest choice of draft and bottled beers and a pricey wine list. Desserts ($10 each) tended toward the sweet, with dulce de leches and variations thereof: cuatro leches, with coconut, almond and strawberry; and buenas noches, with coffee, caramel and hot fudge. They provided the sugar kick needed to sneak out of this bustling chamber, or to launch you toward the bar for a margarita. ✖✖✖

HEART FELT

The Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children's annual fund-raiser, "Together Against Abuse," took place at the Fairmont Copley Plaza Hotel on April 28. Some 450 guests attended the dinner and auction, raising $800,000 for child-abuse prevention and intervention programs across the state.

On April 30, the "Boston Heart Ball" at the Westin Copley Place Boston benefitted the American Heart Association. In addition to dinner, dancing and an auction, Boston Marathoner Carleton Smith spoke about surviving a heart attack while running in 2010, and cardiologist Patrick O'Gara received the Paul Dudley White Award. The 400 guests raised $750,000.

IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD

Reflections on the New Southie

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

ABOUT FIVE YEARS AGO, I was in Southie enjoying a beer at Murphy's Law when a local woman began chatting with a friend of mine. The Southie denizen asked, in a friendly way, "Where are you from?" My friend replied that she lived just up the street. "That's not what I mean," said Southie Woman, a hard edge creeping into her voice. "That's where you live, but where are you from?"

I enjoy a good catfight as much as anyone, but I took that as our cue to get out of there. Not because the place felt dangerous (though, depending on the time of night, it sometimes does) but because I have no patience with people who assume proprietary airs about entire neighborhoods. Oh, so you grew up on East Fifth and I grew up in Maine? Then excuse me for patronizing this bar that you don't own. Heaven forbid you go out at night in a huge city and encounter someone you don't know from grade school.

When I lived in Southie—which wasn't that long ago—the place was a fair bit more hardscrabble than it is now. I once saw a toothless, incoherently drunk local communicate his feelings toward outsiders by dropping his pants and mooning me. It wasn't unusual to witness a guy puking on the sidewalk at 2 pm on a Tuesday. One Halloween, I decided to put a bowl of candy at the front door, trusting that trick-or-treaters would hew to the honor system and take one piece at a time. Five minutes later, it was all gone. Including the bowl. Southie has a way of reminding you that civilization is a tenuous thing, with anarchy constantly lurking at the fringes.

This isn't to say Southie is a bad place. I loved it, but its famous, charming grit is rooted in a foundation of genuine seediness. Where the Institute of Contemporary Art now stands, I once witnessed a performance piece I call, "Strippers stripping in a bus parked in an abandoned lot."

Now the area is teeming with restaurants, nary a stripper in sight. Across Broadway, the M Street Beach was rebuilt with tons of new sand, becoming a destination for people other than New Year's Day masochists. Restaurants bloom along Broadway.

By bravely parking my BMW on the street, I helped pave the way for yuppie heathens.

Where once the most exotic foodstuffs in Southie were found on the dusty shelves of Stop & Shop, you can now go to American Provisions and buy things with the word "artisanal" in the name.

Sometime within the past few years, Southie turned a corner. And I'm disgruntled about that, because it happened right after I left. Hey Southie, I would've liked some Indian food and Chimay on tap and maybe access to a dock that's not controlled by an insular townie yacht club. New Southie has all that stuff, and I missed it.

I get a time-lapse view of Southie development because I still go to Shag for haircuts. I used to live down the street and became friends with Sandy, the owner. When I walk into the salon, a loft space in an old warehouse, most of the people who work there probably assume that my presence is part of some kind of amnesty program for uncool guys who are afraid of tattoos. I would wager that I'm the only person who goes to Shag for a boy's regular.

However, should I decide to get more adventurous, I can consult my friend Krishan, who just opened a hair-extension store on the west side of town. In keeping with modern-Southie, hipster-yuppie aesthetics, his business is housed in an old boxing gym and looks like a high-end vodka lounge. He's got some extra space, which I've recommended he convert to an underground speakeasy with open-mike nights and dedicated parking for fixed-gear bicycles.

No neighborhood is static, and places are always creeping toward either gentrification or decline. Right now, Southie is in that sweet spot between upscale appeal and hardscrabble authenticity. I'm jealous of the people who live there—by bravely parking my BMW on the street, I helped pave the way for yuppie heathens. And now Southie is like the new South End, only cooler.

Well, not quite. The other day I turned on the TV to see that the morning news was all about Southie. "Police broke up brawls at Carson Beach over the weekend," said the anchor. "A thousand teenagers gathered to watch rival gangs fight."

I'd assumed that these days Southie would be more likely to host a flashmob than an actual mob, but there it is—on one side of town, there's a Legal Seafoods with a retractable roof. On the other, we have gangs fighting on the beach. Or, as I like to call it, "a little something for everyone." Southie, don't ever change. ✖✖✖

ON SAGE

Wise words from my favorite lawyer

"ALL LIFE IS RELATIONSHIPS." That's my number-one principle for getting ahead in a career and for managing personal journeys. But we live in an increasingly anonymous society and are often forced to be our own advocates in the key areas of our lives: medical, financial and legal. It's vital to build your own team of professionals on whom you can rely.

On the legal side of things, there's Bill Eisen, a smart lawyer with a fastball who specializes in wills, estates and trusts. He offers practical counsel that's grounded in knowledge of how things work in the real world, not in the land of make believe. One of my prejudices is that I like people with common sense—street smarts, if you will. I also admire people who work both sides of the brain, the practical and the creative sides. Eisen is both. For instance, he assembled a list called "Stop Living Like a Stupid Person: 250 Common Mistakes Even You Can Avoid," which includes gems like: "Never go out on the roof to do the job yourself," "Don't move to Buffalo for a better job," and, "Don't ask your father about his sex life."

Eisen teaches a course at the Harvard Extension School called "Legal Reasoning," but it's really about language and thinking. "I understand that I'm in the entertainment business here," he says. "I can't teach you anything unless I interest you. And I can't interest you unless I can entertain." So he starts off telling me about the fox and the rabbit.

"Law is my conveyance to teach you to think," says Eisen. "Every legal problem is a disguised human problem. I see a rabbit running. But I want to talk about the fox that I can't see chasing that rabbit. Try to think about what is not immediately apparent." He illustrates this point: "A young client of mine committed himself to a mental facility. Then he wanted out, but the laws prevented his release. His parents were frantic, and no one seemed to have any answers for this. I thought about the problem, called the hospital and told the administrators, 'You say you won't release my client. Fine. We will never pay any of your bills.' They let him go the next morning."

Eisen is keen on knowing his characters. "People are normal in inverse proportion to how long you know them," he says. In other words, the better you know a person, the less normal they appear. "A governor of a New England state called me some time ago and said that he had identified a perfect person to fill a key cabinet post," says Eisen. But the candidate hadn't filed tax returns for some time. Even so, the governor said, "He's just brilliant, and I need him."

"I'll bet that the police have been to his house in the last three months," Eisen said to the governor.

"Why would you say that?"

"Because non-filers always have something else going on, things they're hiding."

"But I went to law school with the guy. That's impossible."

"You never really know another person," countered Eisen. He was right. The prospective cabinet member had lost his driver's license for being intoxicated at the wheel, and his wife had a restraining order against him. He never got the job.

Character is everything. "I'll bet you I can go to a Red Sox game with a prospective client, never talk about the law for nine innings, and then write his estate plan," observes Eisen. "You learn so much about people in a nine-inning game. Or during a golf game. You need a lawyer who is happy with his life. It's OK to have a doctor in a bad marriage do a colonoscopy on you. It's a very short-term relationship. But lawyers can be in your lives forever."

Eisen seems like a sly, provocative elf as he teaches. "If your lawyer advises you to litigate without really trying to settle first, he or she is giving you very bad advice. Why? Because more people come home winners from Vegas than win by litigating. You will get as far litigating as by arguing with the police, or your idiot nephew."

If the law is clear and straightforward, he asks, how come Justices Stephen Breyer and Clarence Thomas always vote differently? "Judges earn their living making it appear that their opinions are mandated by the law, when in fact the reasons they offer are somewhere between self-serving justifications and mere excuses."

Another Eisen tidbit that's both street smart and practical: "The President of the United States is considering whom to appoint to the Supreme Court. He asks you how to predict the way a potential justice will vote. What do you advise him? (After all, a lot of presidents have been disappointed—Eisenhower appointed Earl Warren!) Don't read the applicant's law review articles or judicial opinions from the lower court. Visit his house. Look at his library. See the books he has read. Go to his old neighborhood. Interview the people who knew him when he grew up."

Insightful words. For more of them, I've decided to audit Eisen's class in the fall.×××

ON LESTER, THE CUP AND SHAQ SAYING GOOD-BYE

3 RANDOM THOUGHTS

Kill the Cameras Enough with all the goofy Tom Brady photos. Seriously, I don't want to see them anymore. I don't care if you have a shot of Brady frolicking in a dewy meadow with a lollipop and bouquet of tulips. If it's not football, I'm not interested. (Though I'm still accepting Gisele pics.)

Time for Tommy John So is this the end of the Dice-K experiment? If so, I'll give it a four out of 10. You can't discount that he helped them win a World Series and went 18-3 in his second year, but overall? Yup, a solid four. One for every hour of an average Dice-K start.

Numbers Game When the time comes, which of Kobe's numbers will the Lakers retire: 8? 24? Both? Or maybe, in the spirit of Loscy, L.A. can just raise the name Kobe to the rafters? He'd like that. Prefer it, actually. Or maybe they should just disband the franchise... No complaints here.

CALL OF THE WILD Papelbon has bounced back.

5 SOX STORIES

Closing Time After two tumultuous seasons, I figured this was the end of the road for Jonathan Papelbon in Boston. And that still may be the case. But even if it's his last hurrah, Papelbon's bounced back in a way that I never imagined. WHIP's down. Ks/9 are at a career high. One blown save! He's back on track, and considering that Bard doesn't look quite ready (yet), the Wild Thing may have saved the Sox from Craig Hansen 2.0.

Carl, So Nice to See You! Man, that was a long time coming. But the Carl Crawford era is real, and it's spectacular. As I write, he's still hitting only .235 with a .269 OBP, so yeah, there's still a ways to go. But mark my words: C.C. turned the corner in Cleveland. It's .250 or bust!

Ace for Cheap Jon Lester will make $25 million over the next three seasons, or $5 million less than Crawford makes next season alone. Of course, it's only a matter of time before Lester gets paid. When the time comes, John Henry might have to sell Liverpool to keep No. 31 on board. But for now, we'll take solace in the fact that one of the league's best pitchers remains one of its greatest bargains. Unlike...

J.D. Who? Here's what I find most amazing about J.D. Drew: He's been here for five years, and I still don't know one thing about him. Has he ever done an interview outside of the clubhouse? Ever made an appearance that involved actual human interaction? Maybe I just missed it. But outside of one swing, the guy's pretty much been a $70-million mannequin.

But There Are Exceptions Along those same lines, Adrian Gonzalez isn't the most engaging personality to ever grace the Sox clubhouse. But guess what? No one cares. Gonzalez could be mute, and he'd still be the most entertaining hitter the Sox have had since Manny. And once José Bautista gets suspended, AGon just might take home the Triple Crown. (Just kidding, Bautista's clean.)(I think.)

1 ONE CALL FOR THE CUP

Vancouver in six. Anyone familiar with my track record knows this is pretty much the best thing that's ever happened to the Bruins. Better than Roberto Luongo contracting leprosy, or the Sedin twins waking up conjoined. Yup, I'm picking the Canucks. Now here comes the Cup.

4 DATES TO WATCH

6/8: The Stanley Cup Finals are back in Boston for the first time in 21 years! Actually, now it's the second time in 21 years (damn you, Game 3). But Game 4's tonight.

6/16: Nowadays, Tiger's game is almost as laughable as his sexcapades, but he'll change that at the U.S. Open. (Not by winning, but by getting busy in a bunker.)

6/17: The Sox host the Milwaukee Brewers, their former AL East rivals. (I'd be more more excited if Teddy Higuera was still pitching.)

6/20: The Padres come to Fenway, as a three-game series against Red Sox West begins. Has to be a little awkward for Adrian Gonzalez, right? Like if Maddox Jolie went back to visit his old village.

2 ON THE BIG SAYONARA

Retirement Retweeted... There are two sides to Shaquille O'Neal: the athlete and the entertainer. And on June 1, the athlete tweeted us goodbye, marking the end of one of the most memorable careers in NBA history. It's sad to see him go, but the time was obviously right. We hadn't seen the real Shaq in close to five years, and last season, the Diesel ran out of gas.

But on the Other Hand... Shaq the Entertainer (Cedric's cousin) isn't going anywhere. Don't be surprised if he ends up on TNT with Charles Barkley, or with his own sitcom or maybe even taking over for Oprah. Don't be surprised by anything. Just know that if there's a spotlight shining, he'll find it.

Aimee Mann: I think it's just a sport that once I started to do it, I understood how difficult and crafty and strategic it was. And also how unbearably exhausting. It's almost impossible to do. I just appreciate what it takes.

Does L.A. or Boston give you more material?
I think Boston would probably give me more of my kind of material, but there's crazy people everywhere. There are plenty of crazy people in L.A. They're just crazy in a way that I'm generally not that into.

Most pathetic song or line you ever wrote?
There's a line in "4th of July" that says, "full of pathos and pain." If you actually put the word pathos in a song…it's nicer to sort of circle the area than to land right on it.

How do you respond to criticisms that you're a downer, or that your music is very dark?
It's funny. That's my joke about myself, that I'm super depressing and dark. But I don't actually feel that way as a person. I'm sure there are reviews out there that say, "Give us a break; she's such a bummer!" But I think there should be a place for music that talks about very real, sometimes difficult emotions, and I think people relate to that.

How much of your writing is autobiographical?
Less and less. It's not, in the sense that it's something I've directly or literally experienced, but I like to be able to relate to what I'm writing. If I'm describing a situation where someone is going through pain or out of their mind, I can relate to that historically, but that's not my life anymore.

What about people who characterize your music as either misanthropic or man-hating?
Really? [Laughs.] I'd say my music is more boy-crazy than man-hating. That would be a more accurate charge to level at me.

Artist you'd most like to see do a cover of one of your songs?
I enjoy hearing my songs sung by just about anybody but me. I just find it more interesting and more fun being done by someone else. I think I'd pick [Coldplay's] Chris Martin. I like his voice.

Does the course of true love ever run smooth?
I don't think the course of anything, if you're a human being, ever runs smooth. But that doesn't mean it's impossible.

I picture you with a bottle of whiskey next to you when you write. True or not?
I doubt it. I'm sure I have at some point worked on a song when I've had a couple of drinks, but that's certainly not standard operating procedure.

What's up with your Christmas album?
Sometimes, people will suggest something I think is so absurd, but the longer I think about it, I start to think, "Maybe…" The idea to turn one of my records into a musical was also like that. There's something about my brain that enjoys a puzzle or a challenge.

Are you a coffee and cigarettes kinda gal?
I like coffee, but I'm too delicate for actual caffeine, and I used to smoke but I quit.

Do your songs make you cry?
I have cried a couple of times when writing something. Certain lines might make me weepy, but I wouldn't say the whole song or listening to my own music does that.

Three artists you're listening to now?
I don't really listen to a lot of music, but I will give you one: Sharon Van Etten.

Do you think women get a raw deal in the music business?
I don't think so anymore. There's still an expectation that women should promote themselves in a certain way, and that's kind of irritating, so the playing field may be bumpy, but it's semi-level.

How many shrinks have you seen in your life?
Only two.

Do you consciously juxtapose sad lyrics with pretty melodies?
No. I almost always write the music first, and I really try to write what it feels like the music has in it. I know that sounds like one of those mystical, irritating artist things to say, but that's what I do. I go from the atmosphere or vibe or feeling and try to figure out what story goes with that.

If you had to be compared to a writer, who would you want it to be?
My favorite writer is F. Scott Fitzgerald. He's actually a very lyrical writer, and I try to write in a more conversational, stripped-down way. I'd love to be compared to him, but I don't think it's appropriate.

Do you listen to a lot of classical music?
I do. I like the Baroque composers. You can't go wrong with Bach. I love all his organ and piano pieces. I'm not a super fan of Mozart. Beethoven's a little much for me. But I've also started getting interested again in Stravinsky, Bartók, Mussorgsky, more modern guys. Aaron Copland. George Ives.

Who would you want to play you in the movie of your life?
Looks-wise, I'd love for people to think I look like Gwyneth Paltrow, but I'm always afraid I look more like Cloris Leachman. ✖✖✖

Two chefs escape the confines of their kitchens

Charles Draghi's Picnic

"Italians eat outside whenever they can," says Erbaluce co-owner Charles Draghi. The acclaimed chef has been plating up Northern Italian dishes in Bay Village for the past two and a half years, but his love affair with herbs stretches back to his Piemontese heritage. "The air there is always perfumed, you're so close to the Riviera," he says. "That would have to be where I'd take the ultimate picnic."

Though wrangled by the restrictions of a basket, Draghi's selections permit natural flavors to shine through and bring plenty of unexpected touches—like sweet lobster coral (otherwise known as roe) whipped into a saffron-spiked sauce for the shelled meat. "These are the simple flavors that really remind me of my youth," he says. Nodding to Continental tradition, Draghi's dishes rely on the freshest, highest-quality ingredients available.

Puritanical Massachusetts law doesn't allow alcohol consumption in public places, but if you're taking your al fresco banquet to private property, Draghi insists on uncorking a bottle of Terlan Quarz Sauvignon ("The best that exists!") to add to the European feel. With or without wine, this un-fussy fare will undoubtedly keep the ants marching.

Barry Maiden's Cookout

Cookouts are essential for summer: Sticky fingers, paper plates and a cold beer are more than just the inspiration for a new Tim McGraw song. Home cooking has made Hungry Mother chef/co-owner Barry Maiden a leader in the local Southern-food scene, and during the warmer months you'll find him setting up shop in his Somerville backyard for relatives and friends.

For his summer grill, he keeps it in the family. "My wife is Brazilian, so the hot dogs are definitely for her," Maiden says about his tomato-and-corn-sauced pups. Sloppy barbecue chicken gets a twist with his dry-rubbed beer can bird, offering flavor without mess. "The Budweiser also steams the chicken as it roasts on the grill, so it's doing double duty," he says. "There's nothing more American than this."

Though raised in Virginia, Maiden can't be written off as a country boy who made it big with a good gravy recipe. Aside from training in the kitchens at L'Espalier and Lumière, the influence of his Panama-born mother provided an affinity for South American flavors, like cachaça. The liquor, typically reserved for caipirinhas, spikes his steak marinade and sangria. "The flavor is just so bright. To me that's what summer cooking is all about."

DRAGHI'S PICNIC:

ROASTED GUINEA HEN

1 whole guinea hen
1 bunch fresh rosemary
1 lemon, juiced and quartered
Kosher salt
Freshly ground black pepper

1. Preheat oven to 450 degrees.
2. Liberally season the inside and outside of the hen with salt and pepper. Stuff the cavity with rosemary and lemon quarters. Place in a small roasting pan and cook for 10-15 minutes.
3. Baste the hen with pan juices and lemon juice. Reduce the oven temperature to 350 degrees and cook for 30 minutes. The hen is done when the internal temperature reaches 160 degrees, or when the juices run clear between the thigh and the breast. Wrap in aluminum foil and allow the hen to rest for 15 minutes before packing for your picnic.

ROASTED LOBSTER WITH LOBSTER CORAL MAIONESE

For the lobster:
1 or 2 whole lobsters
4 wine corks
1 bunch assorted herb branches (like rosemary and thyme)

1. Place the wine corks and herb branches in an aluminum pie plate and set it directly over the heat source on a grill. When the grill is hot, place the lobster on the grill and cook for seven minutes per pound.
2. Chill the lobster before removing the meat from the shell. Use the maionese as a dip.

For the maionese:
2 extra-large eggs
2 cups extra virgin olive oil
2 tablespoons cooked lobster coral (also known as roe)*
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
¼ teaspoon saffron threads
¼ teaspoon crushed red pepper
10 tarragon leaves, minced
6 basil leaves, minced
6 mint leaves, minced
Juice of one lemon
Sea salt and freshly ground white pepper, to taste

1. Whisk the eggs with the Dijon mustard and slowly stream the olive oil into the mixture until it forms a thick maionese.
2. In a separate bowl, finely grate the lobster coral. Add the saffron threads and crushed red pepper. Cover with lemon juice and set aside from 15-20 minutes.
3. Stir the coral mixture into the maionese. Add the chopped herbs and season with salt and white pepper. Allow the mixture to sit for at least an hour before serving.

This can be obtained from any fishmonger who cooks lobster, or from lobster bodies sold for making soups.*

CUCUMBER RELISH FOR OYSTERS

1 cup peeled and diced English cucumber
3 tablespoons Greek yogurt
2 tablespoons freshly grated horseradish
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
1 tablespoon extra virgin olive oil
1 tablespoon tarragon leaves
1 tablespoon chopped mint leaves
Sea salt and freshly ground white pepper, to taste

Mix the ingredients and allow to set for 15-20 minutes in the refrigerator. Spoon over freshly opened oysters.

PICKLED GREEN TOMATOES OR WATERMELON RINDS

5 large green tomatoes, cut into 8 wedges, or the rind of 1 small watermelon, cut into chunks
1 large onion, thinly julienned
3 cloves of garlic, thinly sliced
1 cup white wine vinegar
¾ cup honey
3 tablespoons sea salt
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
1 tablespoon rosemary leaves
1 tablespoon sage leaves
2 teaspoons fennel seeds
2 teaspoons allspice
1 teaspoon crushed red pepper
3 fresh bay leaves

Mix ingredients together. Cover in plastic wrap and let set overnight in the refrigerator.

CHOCOLATE AND ROSEWATER TRUFFLES

1 cup Callebaut bittersweet chocolate pastilles
½ cup unsweetened cocoa powder
¼ cup heavy cream
1 double espresso
1 teaspoon rosewater
1 teaspoon aged balsamic vinegar

1. Using a double boiler, temper the chocolate with cream, balsamic vinegar, espresso and rosewater until just melted. Whisk together and refrigerate until firm.
2. Using a spoon, scoop the chocolate into small pieces (about the size of large marbles). Roll in cocoa powder.

MAIDEN'S COOKOUT

BARBECUE BEER CAN CHICKEN

(adapted from Steven Raichlen's recipe for Ragin' Cajun Beer Can Chicken)

1 chicken (3 ½-4 pounds)
1 can Budweiser
1 teaspoon liquid smoke
2 cups wood chips or chunks (preferably hickory or cherry), soaked for one hour in water or beer

For the barbecue rub:
2 cups light brown sugar
¾ cup salt
4 tablespoons chili powder
2 teaspoons black pepper
2 teaspoons cayenne pepper
2 teaspoons Old Bay seasoning
2 teaspoons thyme
2 teaspoons garlic powder
2 teaspoons onion powder

1. Make three holes in the top of a beer can. Pour the liquid smoke into the can and mix gently.
2. Remove the giblets and trim the chicken. Blot dry with paper towels. Place in a bowl and add half the beer mixture. Allow to marinate for 45 minutes in the refrigerator, turning twice.
3. Mix the ingredients for the rub. Remove the chicken from the marinade and pat dry. Sprinkle two teaspoons of the rub inside the cavity and one teaspoon into the neck.
Place a large drip pan in the center of a charcoal grill and build to medium heat.
4. Coat the skin of the chicken with olive oil and then cover with one tablespoon of the rub. Put the rest of the rub into the beer mixture. Place the chicken onto the beer can and position so it stands up vertically.
5. Put wood chips onto the coals. Place the chicken in the center of the grill. Cover and cook until the skin is browned and the internal temperature reads 180 degrees, about 75-90 minutes. Transfer to a cutting board and carefully remove the can from the chicken. Carve and serve.

WORCESTERSHIRE, LIME & CACHAÇA MARINADE

⅓ cup fresh lime juice
¼ cup cachaça
¼ cup Worcestershire sauce
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 tablespoons cilantro, chopped
2 teaspoons cumin, toasted and ground
2 teaspoons freshly ground black pepper
2 teaspoons coriander, toasted and ground
1 teaspoon chili powder
1 teaspoon dried oregano

Mix ingredients in a bowl. Pour over skirt steak and allow to marinate for at least three hours (or overnight) before grilling.

TOMATO SAUCE FOR HOT DOG TOPPING

2 cups peeled, seeded and chopped ripe tomatoes (including juice), or 16 oz. canned crushed tomatoes (including juice)
1 cup frozen organic corn kernels, or 2 ears fresh corn, shucked and removed from cob
2 large garlic cloves, chopped
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon hot pepper flakes
½ teaspoon salt
Freshly ground black pepper
Shredded mozzarella

In a small saucepan, combine all ingredients but cheese and simmer, stirring frequently, until reduced to 1½ cups, about 10-15 minutes. Season to taste and set aside. When ready, spoon over grilled hot dogs*. Top with mozzarella.

To make grilled hot dog buns even softer, put them back in the plastic bag they came in to steam for a few minutes before serving.*

WHIPPED FETA TOPPING FOR CORN ON THE COB

4 ounces Greek feta cheese
¼ cup mayonnaise
1 tablespoon fresh oregano or chives, chopped
Pinch salt
Pinch cayenne pepper

Combine ingredients in a food processor and mix until a creamy texture is reached, about 30 seconds. Spread onto grilled corn*.

Roast your corn in the husk before grilling and heat it on the grill the day of your barbecue. The husk causes the corn to steam, locking in flavor.*

GRILLED ROMAINE SALAD WITH ASPARAGUS, SWEET ONIONS AND PORTOBELLO MUSHROOMS

6 asparagus stalks
2 heads romaine lettuce
2 portobello mushroom caps
2 sweet onions
2 lemon wedges
Salt and pepper, to taste

Slice the romaine in half, leaving the core intact. Brush the grill with olive oil. Season the vegetables with salt and pepper and place onto a hot grill until they just start to char. Remove vegetables from the grill and slice mushroom into big pieces. Assemble on a plate and squeeze lemon juice over the top.

WHITE SANGRIA

2 cups dry white wine
¾ cup triple sec or St-Germain
¾ cup cachaça
½ cup freshly squeezed orange juice
½ cup lime-flavored sparkling water
Seasonal fresh fruit

Mix together and serve over ice.

COCKTAILS PERFECT FOR SUMMER ENTERTAINING.

OPENING SEASON

TEMAZCAL IS A NEWCOMER TO THE CITY'S RESTAURANT SCENE.

RECIPE FOR

THE STORY OF HOW BOSTON RESTAURANTS GET FUNDED

BY NANCY GAINES

PHOTOGRAPHS BY EMILY KNUDSEN

SUCCESS

THE WORKS TASTY BURGER COMES FROM THE FRANKLIN CAFE TEAM.

How's this for a contradiction? It's never been harder to get money to start a restaurant in Boston, yet there have never been so many restaurants opening their doors.

The anomaly is easily explained. From an investment standpoint, it's not exactly the best of times, but big-name restaurateurs have the credit and track records to extend to new locales. And although it may be the worst of times for budding culinary entrepreneurs, a few have managed to break out on their own, albeit only after leveraging everything from their life savings to their souls. They've done so in the face of stiffening competition—the local industry added 2,000 seats in the last two years—and amid some of the most spectacular collapses in long memory, from Aujourd'hui to Rocca. Those scares, plus a sluggish recovery, have balky banks clutching their purse strings, and would-be investors, sellers and landlords squeezing newcomers hard.

"Restaurants are a pariah in this economy," says Charlie Perkins, president of the Boston Restaurant Group, Inc., which orchestrates restaurant deals. "It's terrible out there. I've sold about 600 restaurants, and I've never seen such demanding landlords—they want guarantees of up to five years' rent—and banks that want 40 to 50 percent down, or 100 percent collateralization."

This tough climate isn't stopping eager restaurateurs. Four significant entries opened this spring on Liberty Wharf, where Jimmy's Harborside used to roost. Roger Berkowitz hosts Legal Harborside, a 20,000-square-foot mother of all Legal Sea Foods. Then comes another from the Jerry Remy sports-bar franchise, and an entry from Dallas, the high-end steak house Del Frisco's. The fourth is Temazcal Tequila Cantina from big-name chef Todd Hall, and a fifth spot aims to be filled later this year.

With new restaurant openings, it's the rule that established players dominate the field. Michael Schlow of Radius, Via Matta et al, opened Tico this spring, while Rialto's Jody Adams is launching Trade at Atlantic Wharf. Uptown, industry giants and celebrity chefs Lydia Shire and Jasper White, plus nightlife mogul Patrick Lyons, last summer unveiled their $9-million creation, Towne Stove and Spirits, directly opposite Lyons's brand new Back Bay Social Club.

By Perkins' count, for every 10 restaurants that recently closed, 10 more opened. Red Lantern, a 9000-square-foot Asian place, is slated to open this month on Stanhope Street under Randy Greenstein and Ed and Joe Kane, who own Tosca in Hingham, the Estate and other nightspots. Up in Downtown Crossing we'll see 49 Social, replacing Ivy. Garrett Harker of Eastern Standard recruited chef Jeremy Sewall and shellfish breeder Skip Bennett to found Island Creek Oyster Bar in Kenmore Square. Harker partnered with the development team of the Hotel Commonwealth, backed by Boston University, but in a past life, he teamed up with Barbara Lynch at No. 9 Park and B&G (as in Barbara and Garrett) Oysters.

"There's not even a real group of players," says Harker of today's restaurant financing field. "So there's a lot of courting, schmoozing and shaking hands going on," the better to lure investors. "Then, most find a reason to say no."

As much as cautious attitudes toward cash can stifle inventiveness, there always will be the small gems—often in less expensive, outlying neighborhoods—that become next year's hot property. Think Somerville's Bergamot and Journeyman, or Merengue in Roxbury. Jason Bond of Bondir in Cambridge, another tiny jewel, said his restaurant came to fruition on a relative shoestring. He used his savings and a bank loan, handling the construction work himself. Even though this was his first solo venture, Bond, 40, had a superlative work history (No. 9 Park, B&G Oysters, the Butcher Shop, executive chef at Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro), which he said the bank examined closely.

There are basically four ways to bankroll a restaurant: a loan, private investors, seller-financing or self-financing. Time was, an aspiring restaurateur could open shop for about $125,000. Time was, banks smiled on such ventures. The late Jack Sidell, who ran U.S. Trust in the 1970s and '80s, gave a leg up to places such as Biba, Charley's, Davio's, Hamersley's, Jasper's and Olives.

"There isn't anybody out there now like my dad," says Kathy Sidell Trustman, owner of the four Met bars and restaurants, and whose sister, Stephanie Sokolove, owns Stephanie's on Newbury and Stephi's on Tremont. Perhaps coming closest would be Ken Himmel, financier and developer of Copley Place and New York's Time Warner Center, who's had a hand in starting Boston restaurants for 30 years, from Grill 23 to Bistro du Midi. The late K. Dun Gifford, an early promoter of healthy eating, invested in several local eateries, including (with Himmel) Harvard Square's Harvest. There are other players in the game, of course. In the '90s, billionaire hedge fund manager Jim Pallotta bankrolled Todd English until they had a falling out, and helped Radius, Via Matta and Ming Tsai's Blue Ginger. His sisters now operate Nebo in the North End. Then there's radio mogul Richie Balsbaugh, who (with Pallotta) helped start Saint in 2002.

Even for heavy hitters like these, restaurants can be a chancy game. Between 1990 and 2006, average opening costs doubled to reach about $500,000. Blame rising costs of liquor licenses and health care, lower profit margins and higher rents. Still, it wasn't so long ago that, "All you needed was a two-star chef and five attorneys with 100 grand each to invest," says Perkins. Michael Staub, whose Group M Inc. in Cambridge creates business plans for restaurant buyers, estimates that today, "it'll run about $750,000." That includes purchase and renovation costs (the latter run about $250 per square foot). Then there are soft costs like inventory, insurance and publicity, which easily run up a tab of more than a million dollars.

For track record holders like the ones fueling the current growth spurt, there's little need to dial for dollars. Less experienced restaurateurs have to cobble together deals, often with too many, not too few, backers. "Having 10 or 12 guys who all have a piece of you can be investor hell," says one restaurateur who didn't want his name attached to that thought.

David D'Alessandro, former chairman of John Hancock, who purchased Toscano on Charles Street nearly five years ago for his son, Andrew, minces no words. "Anyone with the God-given ability to eat thinks they know how to run a restaurant," says D'Alessandro, who, no surprise, could self-finance. If you bring in investors, "be ready for a Faustian bargain. Most investors are just looking for a right to interfere." (Andrew D'Alessandro says dad is a "hands-off" angel.)

Dancing with the devil, however, is the only way to go for most people who want to get into the business. "Sure, if you're a Lyons, a Schlow, an Adams," says Perkins, "getting money's not difficult. But for startups, for mom-and-pop businesses, financing is a real toothache right now. You need a very strong backer, a killer business plan, a celebrity chef."

According to a Cornell University study, nationwide about 27 percent of new restaurants fail fast, so closings are expected. But some hotspots-turned-cold are surprises. The South End's Banq, an estimated $2-million venture, went belly-up in the fall of 2009 only to reappear as Ginger Park. With celebrity chef Patricia Yeo at the helm, it still only lasted about a year. Aujourd'hui, often named the best restaurant in the city, closed shop in the Four Seasons in 2009, saying the numbers just didn't work in this economy. After months of looking for a space to hang his toque, its chef, William Kovel, is set to open Catalyst in Kendall Square this summer.

Perhaps most notable is the demise of Rocca, opened in 2007 in the South End under the venerable aegis of Michela Larson's Sapphire Restaurant Group. Despite Top Chef stand-out Tiffani Faison winning accolades for its food, Rocca closed at the end of last year, reportedly because it couldn't cover costs. Says Perkins, "If it can happen to Michela," the fabled force behind Rialto, Noir and Blu, "what does that say about anyone else?"

But these failures aren't really shocking in light of the challenge new restaurants face in their first year. An industry standard holds that a purchase price should be one-third of sales. Confusing the issue is that sales, based on the previous owner, might markedly change under a new proprietor.

If success were to be predicted, someone like Jason Santos might fit Perkins' bill. Santos, 35, was chef at Gargoyles on the Square in Somerville when he made it to the finals of FOX's Hell's Kitchen last summer. "Even before the show ended, I wanted to open my own place," he says. "I got a lot of 'offers' when I was on TV, but most of them weren't for real."

A few months later, Santos was approached by a friend of a friend who liked his cooking and said he would put up money for him to open a restaurant. "I didn't give it a lot of weight," says Santos. "But I had some money and my family had some money, and I started looking at places 'til I saw one I wanted. I told him about it, and asked, 'Are you serious?'"

The investor put up $300,000 for the acquisition and buildout of what will be Blue Inc. on Broad Street. "He probably would have put in more if I needed it," says Santos. "It was all too good to be true, it happened so seamlessly."

On average, local restaurants sport about 100 seats, but Blue Inc. isn't going to be so ambitious (see "Blue World Order," page 28). "I won't retire on a 50-seat restaurant," says Santos, "but I can live comfortably. A lot of Boston people open giant restaurants and fail. I prefer to have a small one that's always packed."

Perkins, who is currently selling about 25 restaurants in metro Boston, with prices ranging from $150,000 for a fast-food restaurant in Allston to $775,000 for a more refined South End space, says that a purchase price in, say, Brookline, might be one-third of sales, while the cost in Boston could be as high as one-half. That's because a liquor license is worth at least $225,000. Industry axioms peg rent at about 6-8 percent of sales. Of the properties on Perkins' list, rents run from about $35,000 to $100,000.

"There are no formulas," says Perkins, after rattling off a spate of them, including variables of food versus beverage profit margins. "Every business needs to be considered on its own." Banks are making loans, says Debbie Lewis, owner of 29 Newbury. "But they're not making stupid loans like they used to. They want some skin in the game," she explains, using the industry argot for restaurateurs putting up their own resources. That skin can run as high as 100 percent collateral, to fetch an interest rate of about 5-10 percent. Even so, says Lewis, "Most investors don't get out whole." But, says Saint owner Brian Lesser, "There's something to be said for potential investors being able to look across the table at someone and see the level of commitment they have to their project."

Teaming up with private investors is much like a marriage: probably half of the relationships go sour. Two of the more explosive splits were Ken Himmel with Lydia Shire and Todd English with Jim Pallotta. In 2006, Shire sued Himmel, a longtime backer, for age discrimination after he fired her from Excelsior. The case was settled out of court, and Shire said part of the agreement was that she not discuss it. The same year, Pallotta and English split the child, namely Figs, to resolve a dispute. Five years later, no one's talking details, but restaurant wisdom holds that English considered Pallotta heavy-handed and intrusive, and Pallotta thought English was overextended. Pallotta got Figs in Wellesley; English kept the Charlestown and Beacon Hill locations.

When it comes to opening a restaurant, "You have to bet on the people," says Harker, whose forays have been wildly successful. "Not the concept, not the location. Kenmore Square? Whew! That was hard." Right now, Harker is putting his money on Alexis Gelburd-Kimler, general manager of Aquitaine in the South End, who's currently hunting for financing for a new restaurant. Over the past 10 months, she's used her days off to pin down a 100-seat spot in Cambridge and a "very experienced" chef.

"I can't stress enough the importance of using the restaurant community in the city," says Gelburd-Kimler, 31. "Asking questions, turning over every rock, going to the next person who leads you to another person. The whole process is an amazing learning curve."

She adds, "And if it doesn't work out this year, it will next year." ✖✖✖

WIGGED OUT

THE THEATER HAS AN ancient legacy of cross-dressing, but it's rarely done with the glam-rock sensibility of Hedwig and the Angry Inch. Coming to Church, the cult musical follows a rocker whose transformative operation leaves her between genders, an obstacle that she learns to overcome through power ballads. Gene Dante and Lisa van Oosterun star in this tale of longing, art, copyright infringement and sexual identity. Celebrate the love and anger with the cast at after-parties hosted by DJ Craig MacNeil June 9-11.

SARAH DWYER

Hedwig and the Angry Inch runs June 9-11, $20, 8 pm at Church, 69 Kilmarnock St., Boston (617-236-7600) churchofboston.com

Feud Behavior

Sharks Attack We're not sure how Tony and Maria's tragic tale has managed to stay fresh for over 50 years, but when West Side Story comes to the Colonial Theatre on June 14, there's no sign of arthritis in those infamous synchronized snaps. Maybe it's because one of the original creators directed this revival—proof that a great musical, like love, perseveres. Nicholas Sobel

The Beaver ★★ ½ Director Jodie Foster's low-budget labor of love grapples sincerely with mental illness in a patently absurd context. It doesn't quite work, but provides a cinematic exorcism for the public's increasingly conflicted relationship with Mel Gibson. It also gives a platform for one of his most indelible performances. Gibson stars as a clinically depressed basket case. After a comically disastrous suicide attempt, he discovers a beat-up puppet in the garbage. Spontaneously, he concocts a radical form of therapy in which he'll only communicate through the puppet, which just so happens to snarl in the cadence of Gibson's Edge of Darkness costar Ray Winstone. It's a depressive's dream, the chance to start everything all over again with a new, unaccountable identity. What's impressive is Foster's ardent insistence that there are no quick fixes and easy outs. This should be common sense, but it's positively startling to hear from a Hollywood movie. Good intentions, plus Gibson's stunning performance, go a long way toward damming up The Beaver's obvious flaws. (At West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Cave of Forgotten Dreams ★★★ "We were here," those Paleolithic folks might well have scrawled on the walls of France's Chauvet cave some 30,000 years ago. The ever-eccentric documentarian Werner Herzog examines the oldest known example of early man seeking to record his experiences. Sealed in limestone and forbidden to visitors save for a few four-hour windows during the day, it's an archaeological treasure-trove that the filmmaker uses as a jumping-off point for cosmic musings. Shot in 3-D, the movie explores the Chauvet cave and highlights the ridiculous restrictions foisted on Herzog's team when they set out to film it. In his effort to capture these early paintings, the director had to rely on a hand-held light source and the sparsest collection of camera gear. I'm not normally a fan of 3-D, but will make an exception for the odd contours of these ancient surfaces. What captivates the filmmaker—and his zeal is contagious—is witnessing early man's attempt at visual expression. Herzog's schticky and altogether delightful narration describes these illustrations as precursors to cinema. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Fast Five ★★★ The most awesomely stupid and stupidly awesome movie I've seen in ages, this fifth installment in the apparently never-ending automotive porn series sends the entire gang to Rio and reunites almost every not-dead player from the entire franchise to pull off an Ocean's Eleven–style heist on a Brazilian crime lord. Bloated and egregiously overlong, director Justin Lin's spectacle piles on one insane set-piece after another, culminating in a symphony of mass destruction that violates every law of physics with bravura showmanship. It was a brilliant move to bring in Dwayne Johnson as a nemesis, since he and Vin Diesel look like 'roided-out, bald doppelgängers competing to out-testosterone one another. It's all very sweaty, homoerotic and violent, but then I've always been a sucker for this sort of musclehead naïveté. Lin is one of the few guys working who can make gargantuan action sequences spatially comprehensible, and for all its goofiness, the picture's climax had me kicking my feet with joy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Hangover Part II ★ ½ Second verse, same as the first—except this time without any of the funny parts. Most of what made director Todd Phillips' raunchy, 2008 original such a beloved blockbuster was the thrill of discovery. At heart a detective story, the tale of three henpecked suburbanites retracing their steps after a bachelor party benefited from an unfamiliar cast and surprising situations. This unnecessary sequel slavishly follows that exact formula almost scene for scene, upping the ante with gross-out squalor and an air of violent unpleasantness, while remaining almost entirely devoid of wit. This time Bangkok stands in for Vegas, there's a monkey instead of a baby, the missing tooth is replaced by a facial tattoo and the prostitutes… well, don't ask. Much like Mike Myers' dreaded Austin Powers sequels, it trots out all the jokes you laughed at last time and beats them like a dead horse. Shockingly well-staged and expertly photographed by people who really should know better, it's a cynical, ugly cash grab. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jane Eyre ★★ There have been at least 12 big-screen adaptations of Charlotte Brontë's 1847 novel, as well as another dozen or so made for TV. Is there anything more we can gain from yet another couple hours with Jane and Mr.

Terrence Malick tries to define the universe.

The Tree of Life ★★★½
Starring Brad Pitt, Jessica Chastain, Hunter McCracken and Sean Penn. Written and directed by Terrence Malick. At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.

'OTHER PEOPLE MAKE movies," my brilliant colleague Matt Zoller Seitz is fond of saying. "Terrence Malick builds cathedrals." A sainted figure among hard-core cinema buffs, Malick disappeared for a couple of decades between 1978's rhapsodic Days Of Heaven and 1998's startling WWII epic The Thin Red Line. By all accounts fed up with the Hollywood game, Malick busied himself in the interim teaching philosophy at MIT, translating Heidegger and bird-watching. Pegged in the press as a freaky recluse because he doesn't like giving interviews or attending awards shows, Malick seems to have inherited Stanley Kubrick's throne as our resident slow-working artiste, unaffected by show-business nonsense.

Rochester? Director Cary Joji Fukunaga's take is respectful, for the most part adequate and, as far as I can see, has no compelling reason to exist. Fukunaga attempts to shake up the text with some rough-hewn naturalism, fixating on the Derbyshire landscapes and overplaying the miserable weather. The shots are handheld and often underexposed, announcing from the outset that this isn't your mom's Jane Eyre. Except it really is. Once you look past the shaky-cameras and ugly costumes, there's nothing new. Luckily, Michael Fassbender is there to liven things up as the moody Rochester. Wearing unfortunate, pubic-looking sideburns, this wry Irish actor plays up the character's lazy contempt for everyone in his company. But Mia Wasikowska's Jane just blandly stands around, suffering from Fukunaga's ugly natural lighting and deliberately drab color scheme. (At the Somerville Theatre, West Newton Cinema and in the suburbs.)

Meek's Cutoff ★★★★ Set in 1845 and loosely inspired by actual events, director Kelly Riechardt's austere, shattering story from the Oregon Trail follows three families who broke off from a larger wagon train, taking the advice of Stephen Meek (Bruce Greenwood), a bearded blowhard who claimed to know a shortcut. Decked out in a Buffalo Bill–esque fringe jacket and constantly babbling frontier horse-pucky, he's a parody of cowboy arrogance. Except you won't find any laughs here. Riechardt's film is muted, severe and hardly an audience-friendly experience. In the spirit of Gus Van Sant's Gerry, it's one of those art movies that film critics like because nothing happens. I was mesmerized. Meek's Cutoff is about the day-to-day grind, mundane tasks and the sick, helpless feeling of not knowing where you're going. As supplies run low, there's a mounting sense of queasiness and dread that becomes overwhelming. When the movie was over, I had to go walk it off for a while before I felt like talking to anybody. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punchline comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and Waltham Embassy.)

Pirates of the Caribbean: On Stranger Tides ★★ Um, did anybody ask for this? Truth be told, the fourth installment in this overlong series, based

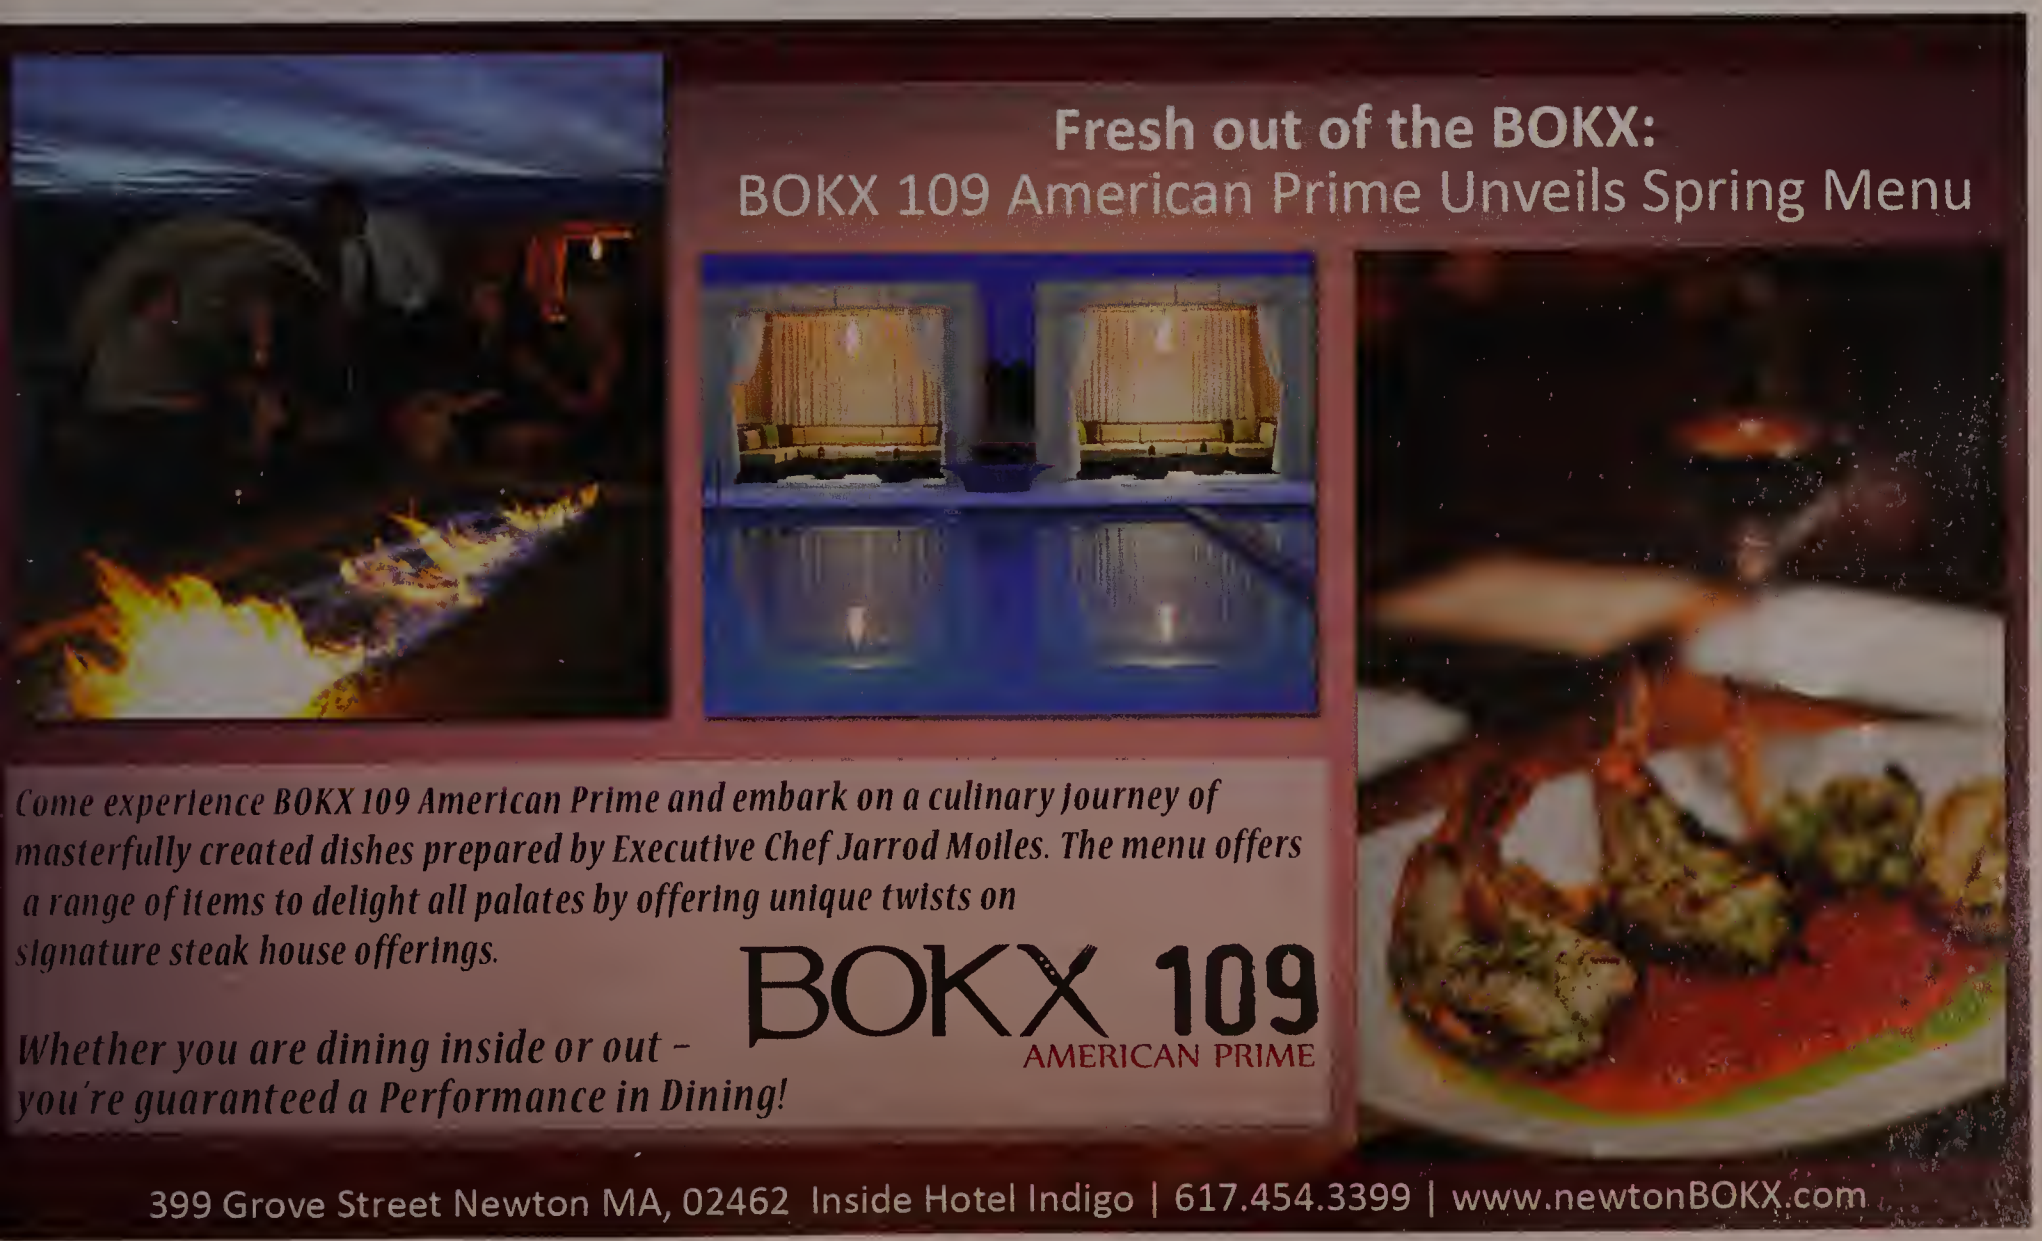
The films themselves burnish the legend. His first four pictures (the other two are 1973's Badlands and 2005's The New World) increasingly abandon traditional notions of scene structure in favor of vivid, Emersonian transcendentalism. Whether tackling the battle of Guadalcanal or the founding of the Jamestown colony, Malick's movies never assume the characters are more important than their surroundings. Any given blade of grass or stray animal is just as worthy of a close-up as a movie star. The running thesis is that all living things coexist as part of the same continuum, a somewhat hippie-dippie notion that nonetheless makes me sob like a toddler with a skinned knee when I watch The New World's last five minutes.

The Tree of Life, a dream project 30 or so years in the making, is in many ways the ultimate expression of Malick's worldview. Even the title flirts with self-parody, and the picture seeks to reconcile one child's troubled upbringing with the entire history of the universe. It is by turns rapturous and astonishing, and occasionally a bit silly. I adore the ambition and am in awe of the accomplishment, even if I'm still not sure it all quite hangs together.

Funny thing is, the art movie event of the year almost didn't happen at all for local critics. Cementing its reputation for incompetence, the AMC Boston Common ran our press screening with a busted center sound channel. They also carelessly left the 3-D filter over the lens, blurring and distorting the image. I gave up, pulled my hat down over my face and took a nap long before the pre-show trivia and word-scramble slides wound up projected over Malick's magnum opus.

Amends were made a week later with a carefully supervised make-up screening, and I now find myself simultaneously transfixed and confounded by The Tree of Life.

Taking the form of a whispered prayer to a God who may or may not be listening, the fractured narrative unspools in symphonic movements. Essentially plotless, The Tree of Life follows the O'Brien family, living in 1950s Texas, and begins with the mysterious death of one of their three sons. Adult Jack (Sean Penn) wanders the modern-day world with barely a line of dialogue, reflecting upon not just his past but also the formation of the solar system.



With an assist from visual-effects legend Douglas Trumbull, who pioneered the technology with 2001: A Space Odyssey, Malick cycles back a few billion years to the Big Bang. We're swept away in a visually ecstatic, self-contained set piece that incorporates everything from the original underwater cellular mitosis to dinosaurs learning compassion. To return to the director's ever-present catchphrase: "All things."

But what most sticks in your gut is the mini-movie plopped into the middle, a searingly personal account of Malick's own boyhood with his emotionally distant, slightly terrifying father (Brad Pitt). Photographed in golden light by genius cinematographer Emmanuel Lubezski, these tersely edited, elliptical sequences evoke a child's wide-eyed view of the world.

Pitt's extraordinary performance presents a man hardened by life who seeks to instill some necessary grit in his lads, even if that means knocking them around a bit. Their mother (Jessica Chastain) is given short shrift and mostly stands around looking like a beatific symbolic construct. It's Pitt's occasional cruelty that lingers. He wears the ineffable sadness of a man who knows that life is going to dole out much worse to these kids, so he can't be too soft.

I can see what Malick was going for here. God, who inflicts such seemingly senseless suffering, is juxtaposed with an earthly father who has the same inscrutable methods. But after one, okay, one-and-a-half, viewings, I'm not convinced that Malick is able to reconcile the quotidian with the cosmic. His final sequence on a mystical beach is unfortunate, at best.

Still, what a wonder this film is to behold. The Tree of Life boasts at least a dozen images I may never be able to shake. Malick's reach exceeds his grasp—but man, that is one hell of a reach. I can't wait to see it again. ✖✖✖

Detoxifying Scrubs

on an eight-minute theme-park ride, isn't a particularly terrible movie. Whereas director Gore Verbinski's first three chapters frustratingly buried genuine visual wit and flights of imagination beneath labyrinthine legends and nonsense, director Rob Marshall's maiden voyage at the helm is skimpy and almost defiantly pedestrian. It's just not interesting enough to get angry about. Yes, Johnny Depp is back as Captain Jack Sparrow, our perpetually blotto, cowardly anti-hero. In the first, Pirates: Curse Of The I Forget What It Was Called, Depp's effeminate sashaying and slurred speech felt like a grand, delightful act of sedition within an otherwise stodgy Disney product. But familiarity breeds contempt, and there's not really enough of a character here to justify yet another trip back to this same shallow well. There's no sense of scope or grandeur in this iteration; everybody is just punching a time clock and setting up the next sequel. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Source Code ★★★ A man (Jake Gyllenhaal) wakes up without his memory on a Chicago commuter train to find a hot fellow passenger (Michelle Monaghan) is being overtly friendly. There's also the unsettling reality that someone else's face is staring back at him in the bathroom mirror. Then the whole damn train explodes. Quickly plunged back to a frosty control bunker, video-linked to an even chillier commanding officer (Vera Farmiga), Gyllenhaal's shell-shocked war vet discovers that—thanks to the brain's capacity to retain information after death (plus a quantum physics equation to be named later)—a secret military forensic operation has allowed him to mind-meld with a civilian victim and witness a terrorist attack that took place hours before. What follows is Groundhog Day meets Speed, a star-crossed love story unfolding in eight-minute couplets. Paced like a rocket and unfolding perilously close to real time, Source Code creates a maze in which we want the hero to solve the mystery and save the girl from a tragedy that has already occurred. (At the Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

so the shock (and delight) of his latest work is that it's a classic samurai adventure. The ghost of Akira Kurosowa looms large over the proceedings, setting a ragtag band of noble ronin out to dispose of the shogun's sadistic heir. Miike's clean frames and elegant compositions are an obvious homage to the master, but oddly there are even more DNA samples from Sam Peckinpah's The Wild Bunch—my personal favorite movie of all time and perhaps the reason why this film hit such a sweet spot. Of course, it can only end one way, and Miike does not disappoint. The final 45 minutes consist of a single, astonishingly staged set piece in which a very unlucky Podunk farm town becomes an elaborate booby trap for the baker's dozen versus what appears to be the entire Japanese army. Also, five words: Flaming oxen used as weapons. (At the Somerville Theatre.)

Thor ★★ Marvel Films' construction of a bridge to nowhere moves forward with another mega-budget prequel laying laborious groundwork for next summer's The Avengers. This time we've got Chris Hemsworth as the arrogant Norse god of thunder, banished to Earth by his father (a never-hammier Anthony Hopkins) to learn a little humility. At first glance, Kenneth Branagh would seem an odd choice to direct a superhero movie, but as the oddball cast prances around the gaudy realm of Asgard in chintzy armor, it's endearing to watch him attack this junk material like it's another one of his Shakespeare adaptations. Hemsworth has a hearty charisma, and the movie's mildly amusing midsection plays like a Viking version of Crocodile Dundee. Asgard's tacky production design owes a debt to Mike Hodges' kitsch classic Flash Gordon, but the guy next to me said it reminded him of a Vegas bathroom. The problem is there's no real weight to any of this stuff. Even the hammer looks like a plastic toy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Win Win ★★★ Writer/director Thomas McCarthy, known for Sundance smashes like The Station Agent and The Visitor, doesn't have a lot of challenging ideas up his sleeve. As far as I can tell, he takes a gimmicky construct and casts it wisely, drawing out fresh performances from underused actors by playing to their strengths in endearing showcase roles. There really isn't anything wrong with the formula. McCarthy's latest stars Paul Giamatti as a schlubby high school coach who accidentally ends up being foster-father to a solemn wrestling prodigy with abandonment issues. Ethical knots abound, paying lip service to troubled times in recession-addled New Jersey, but Win Win truly takes flight whenever it becomes a true underdog sports movie—scoring big laughs from simple three-shots of Giamatti, Jeffrey Tambor and the never-not-funny Bobby Cannavale as beleaguered coaches of the worst wrestling team in the Garden State. McCarthy doesn't ever get a handle on his tale's courtroom histrionics, but the lovable characters and genre payoffs make it a pleasure nonetheless. (At the Somerville Theatre and West Newton Cinema.)

The Doctor Is In

Who Says?

Throughout its supernaturally long stretch on British TV, Doctor Who has managed to transform, jump dimensions and swap actors while still remaining relevant. But for die-hard fans, Elisabeth Sladen and Tom Baker will always be Who's who. June 10-12 at the Brattle Theatre, the Hooked on Who series pays tribute to the dynamic duo (Sladen passed away this year) with memorable episodes from throughout the franchise. For those without their own TARDIS, a few hours of mind travel will do the trick.

POWER PLAY

Cult-rockers Dispatch return to their roots with a Garden party.

Dispatch
plays the TD Garden June 24-26.

INDIE ROOTS-ROCKERS Dispatch have come a long way from their late '90s gigs at local clubs like the Tam and the Middle East. From playing for a crowd of 110,000 at the Hatch Shell in 2004 to three sold-out shows at New York's Madison Square Garden in 2007, they've racked up historic concerts. Still on a roll, they've now got three nights at TD Garden on the horizon.

"It's ridiculous," says guitarist Chad Stokes. A Sherborn, Mass. native, Stokes saw the Bruins, Celtics and Grateful Dead at the original Garden. He once played the current arena with his band State Radio after a Bruins game where they faced off against the team's "Ice Girls" between periods. "They beat us, actually," he confesses.

But Dispatch will be the Garden's main attraction on June 24-26 as part of its first tour in a decade. Not bad for a still largely unknown group that formed at Vermont's Middlebury College in 1995 and gained a national following during the Napster era.

"It was amazing timing as far as being an independent band and getting your music out without having the infrastructure or the money to market and get on radio," says Stokes, 35. "[People] were singing every word for our first time in California."

Fan support hit critical mass just as Stokes, bassist Pete Heimbold and drummer Brad Corrigan had decided to split up. Though Dispatch's free farewell show drew a record mob of 110,000 to the Esplanade, the members of the group knew they needed to recharge with other projects. "We were so wrapped up in each other's identity, we didn't know who we were individually," Stokes says. "We needed that time away."

The group certainly sounds revitalized on a six-song EP digitally released in advance of the tour, with a full album to follow early next year. "We needed to do that for ourselves to kind of stay sane and feel like we're a real band," he says.

From the slicing riffs of "Melon Bend" through the reggae-paced "Con Man" and acoustic, harmony-laced "Valentine," the EP neatly distills the band's blend of rock, folk, funk and world music.

"We lean in certain directions, but we have a great appreciation for anything from Sonic Youth to Woody Guthrie," says Stokes, whose new Martha's Vineyard-recorded solo album, Simmerkane II, even features a cameo by Carly Simon. "I was initially the one into the ska and reggae world, having grown up playing the trombone," he says.

The diverse influences have resulted in a vocal and instrumental versatility that stands as one of the group's biggest strengths, particularly live. Stokes and Heimbold trade off on guitar and bass, while Corrigan steps forward from the drum kit to play guitar and sing lead as well.

"We always liked the switching around," the multifaceted musician says from the Colorado mountains where Dispatch rehearsed for its tour. "It's really refreshing, and we learned the instruments out of necessity because we wanted to expand the sound of the band."

On tour, the trio will be joined by friends that include fill-in drummer Paul Stivitts and percussionist Reinaldo DeJesus, who both played during the group's Madison Square Garden shows. Dispatch became the first independent band to sell out that venue, while boosting its commitment to social causes by having the performances benefit Zimbabwean charities.

A portion of ticket proceeds from the tour will go to local learning programs through the Amplifying Education network. There will also be a school bus parked outside TD Garden to accept book donations to help restock New Orleans' Recovery School District libraries.

"We learned there was more to life than just playing around in a band," Stokes says. "It's important to me, and to the other guys as well, to be responsible with the platform that we're so lucky to have." ✖✖✖

In Memory

In memory of Kim Kennedy, who passed away on May 20, 2011 after a year and a half battle with cancer. Readers will remember Kim's cover shoots and his magical fashion photography that graced these pages for many years. He leaves behind his wife, Marina, his daughter, Misha, and countless friends.

A memorial ceremony is scheduled for
at Hurricane O'Reilly's, 150 Canal St., Boston

Please visit everybodysbrother.com for details.

IMPROPER COM

THE BLOGS

The best way to connect with Ezra, Nick and your favorite Improper writers as they blog on life in America's finest city.

Katya Kirilloff

Facial Flair

Snap Judgment Mellow music mastermind Joe Purdy stops by the Brighton Music Hall to gently caress eardrums with his signature finger-picked-guitar/plinking-piano vibe. Purdy's vocals evoke a chilled-out Rob Thomas, and the guitar lines permeating his soundscapes are almost O.A.R.-esque. With his sparse instrumentals and emotional lyrics, the man might have you weeping behind your Wayfarers at his show on June 21.

Lori Waselchuk

Complex Sentence

Solitary Refinement Among the shackles and grit of a Louisiana maximum-security penitentiary, photographer Lori Waselchuk reveals the compassionate side of abject lives in her depiction of dying prisoners' final moments. The images, which document a hospice program developed to ensure that no prisoner would die alone, comprise a narrative of redemption, letting go, grief and self-discovery. Inmate volunteers keep vigil over the ill and memorialize them after they have passed. The exhibit, Grace Before Dying, offers viewers a poignant and unsettling sense of shared humanity. See it at Boston University's Photographic Resource Center through July 10th.

The Talented Mr. Rockefeller

Stranger Than Fiction Clark Rockefeller was a guy with money, a Harvard-educated wife who acted as breadwinner and a last name that secured his high-society status forever. The only catch: He was living a lie. It's a story Hollywood would come up with, but the true tale of German con-artist Christian Gerhartsreiter unfolds in Mark Seal's The Man in the Rockefeller Suit. Seal reveals the secrets of the serial imposter on June 9 at Brookline Booksmith.

Chances Are You've Been Sitting on a Cure for Cancer

Before Lance, even before LeMond, raised cycling awareness in America, it was the Pan-Mass Challenge that implanted the "a-thon" into this nation's consciousness. Since 1980, the PMC has raised $303 million for Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. This summer, more than 5,000 PMC cyclists will raise $34 million, 100 percent of which will go to cancer research and treatment.

IN THE CARDS

Boys' Night Out

I'm not entirely sure why people who spend their days gambling staggering sums of money would want to play poker at night, but the Texas Hold 'Em Tournament to raise money for Children's Hospital Boston attracted some of the city's biggest financial players to the Boston Harbor Hotel.

Among them: VC titan David Fialkow and his friend, Aerosmith axe man Tom Hamilton, Rue La La founder Ben Fischman, private equity whiz Rob Small and lots of other people who got hit with the lucky stick.

Overheard by the bar: "Did I read your company got a billion-dollar valuation?" to which the answer was, "Yup."

Overheard by the TV, where players could sit out a hand: "Dude, don't ask me questions about my sister—you're like a walking erection."

Make Mine a Cuba Libre

The weather was more like a Yorkshire moor, but that was about the only un-Havana-like thing at the Cuban art auction held in the courtyard of the Cambridge manse of architect Graham Gund and his arts-patron wife, Ann, to raise money for the Friends of Caritas Cubana.

The mojitos kept coming, the pressed sandwiches were finger-lickin' good and the evening raised a ton of dough thanks to guests like mustachioed muchacho Juan Prieto, his cousin, Micho Spring, Cambridge art collector Barbara Lloyd, the improbably tall Jack Roosevelt and his fiery Latin bride, Lacy, big pharma honcho Ed Garmey with the swanlike Sophia Carroll, privateer Andrew Cabot and his jewelry-designer wife, Maud, über-hipsters Camilo Alvarez and Alexandra Cherubini, and one woman who said, "I should have worn wedges. Heels plus cobblestones equals me dead or killing someone else."

Meanwhile, the evening's archest remark was: "She doesn't do anything by half measures… except marriage."

Eyes Are the Ones With Lashes

The Hot Pink Party was a high-gloss gala done in bubblegum hues held at the Museum of Fine Arts to benefit the Breast Cancer Research Foundation.

On hand for the big-ticket evening were such eminences as New York philanthropist/photographer Evelyn Lauder, Boston/Berkshires/Palm Beach tastemaker Sandy Krakoff, 24-hour party people Linda and Dan Waintrup, Chestnut Hillion Roberta Cohn and her heart-surgeon husband, Larry, brunette anchor-babe Kelly Tuthill, filmmaker Christy Scott Cashman, yummy mummy Linda Pizzutti Henry and honorees Nancy and Richard Kelleher, who were presented with a piece of Dale Chihuly studio glass for their collection. Guests, meanwhile, were treated to a dinner prepared by celebrity chefs Ming Tsai, Daniel Bruce and Michael Schlow, as well as a performance by Grammy-winning Israeli violinist Miri Ben Ari, whose corkscrew curls deserve an award of their own.

"I wanted to wear a pair of my wife's panties, but she wouldn't let me," said one man who wasn't wearing any pink, while a woman who was accused of the same thing countered with, "Not that you can see." But the evening's choicest comment?

"That guy in the hat's giving me a breast exam with his eyes."

Girls Will Be Girls

Party in the Park, also known as "the hat party," is an estrogen-fest held beneath a giant white tent on the Fenway to raise money for the Emerald Necklace Conservancy.

The ladies' luncheon, lushly decorated and awash in Champagne, attracted the usual suspects, among them: cochairs Katie Schuller Bleakie, Jane Roy and Holly Safford, pre-facelift socialites Julia Owens, Julie Hume Gordon and Kristan Fletcher, ethereal beauty Trevania Henderson, force of nature Christine Tuttle, Mexican Cleopatra Evelyn Peralta, fashion avatar Leslee Shupe and a few token males, like head honchos Mark Volpe of the BSO and Malcolm Rogers of the MFA, in addition to just about every heiress, trophy wife, female CEO and power chick within a 250-mile radius.

Like all good hen parties, there were some extraordinarily catty comments, like, "You look better than Princess Beatrice!"

However, the best conversational volley was:

"You're too skinny. You look like a chopstick."

"I have irritable bowel syndrome."

"Either that, or you take eight Adderall a day and eat one gummy bear." ✖✖✖

A Great Escape

About 15 seconds after the Bruins won the Stanley Cup, I got a text from a friend in Vancouver. "Congrats," he wrote. "People are pretty gutted over here." He added that the streets were filling with smoke. "Sorry to hear that," I replied. "People are pretty happy here. I'm watching an impromptu orgy strike up outside the bar." It's all perspective. There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so.

The mind makes for a handy escape hatch. For instance, when I'm slumped in my office on airless afternoons, a stack of unread music listings gnawing at my sanity, I like to imagine that I'm 19th-century cultural critic and poet Matthew Arnold. It's awesome. I love the late-Victorian idea that, even though the old verities of religion and class are receding against the onslaught of chill modernity, I can still sport handsome side-whiskers. There's also the thrill of believing we can achieve a perfect society if everyone attends edifying lectures. And, oh, to wear a fez with a smoking jacket in the evening! I imagine that I take a thoughtful pull from my pipe before picking up pen and inkpot for a flight of poesy. In no time at all, I've scribbled out Dover Beach, in which I draw together threads of uncertainty and loss of faith, yet poignantly hope that, by remaining true to love, there may yet be some meaning on this "darkling plain." Then I sip a cup of tea and die a little of repression.

Or better, I imagine I'm a ninja. That's actually a hell of a lot more entertaining.

Maiden Voyage

FLIGHT 666

ICELAND EXPRESS touches down in Boston this month. Within its fleet is a converted tour plane; and within that aircraft is a special guest: Iron Maiden frontman Bruce Dickinson, but you can call him Captain. Dickinson has logged more than 7,000 hours in the cockpit, flying from Copenhagen to Kyrgyzstan. Now, he's got the much-needed opportunity to cruise through our city again. "I might see you in Boston," Dickinson says. "I have a T-shirt from an Irish bar, which is so old by now I can't even read where it's from." If you catch him, buy him a drink, but not before takeoff.

Epic Proportions

Fried clam lovers are a proud, passionate people, always eager to argue that their favorite shack serves up the best. That said, you gotta go to the Clam Box—not because they only use Ipswich clams (the most flavorful around, thanks to the nutrient-rich soil), and not because their oil is always fresh. Aficionados make the drive because, if you ask nicely, they'll serve you just the big bellies ($14.25–$21), turning a New England summer staple into a delicacy. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Q&A

LYRICAL PROSE

Internationally acclaimed singer-songwriter Josh Ritter's debut novel, Bright's Passage, about a war veteran guided by an unreliable guardian angel, arrives on June 28. Ritter will perform songs and read selections from his work at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on June 29.

Why a novel?

It just came in front of my head. This one kept coming around, I knew it was going to take more than I could fit in a song to tell.

What inspired the story?

I started from the idea about being out there in this enormous occurrence and then returning to sheltered life. I think the theme of trying to make sense of and live in a world that's gone completely haywire is something many people can relate to.

How did you pick which songs to perform at your Coolidge event?

I went through all of my songs and found many of my songs share similar themes and preoccupations with the novel. Maybe not all is right in heaven, maybe angels aren't necessarily the best people.

What's unique about Boston fans?

No matter where you are, it's great to be back in Boston. My band still lives there, and I remember the first time I played at the Kendall Cafe and Club Passim. When you travel around the country by car, you see how it's all stitched together, but at a good show the audience should never segment the audience.

Are you going to write more novels?

Absolutely. I have a few things in the works. I always enjoy writing novels. I always enjoy it.

SNOUT AND ABOUT

Most people are surprised to see Michael Moxley and Jim Cochener flinging open the doors of the charcuterie-laden Salty Pig. After all, the paint is barely dry on their Jamaica Plain hotspot, Canary Square. "I don't know if I'd recommend opening two restaurants at once or do it again," laughs Moxley. "But the timing felt right, and we saw potential in this space."

The Dartmouth Street location housed Firefly before Six Burner sparked up for a brief stint, but the pair isn't worried about turnover, having already found success skirting the Back Bay/South End line at their other spot, Coda.

Renovations were needed to bring the space up to snuff. "This was never intended to be a full-service restaurant," says Cochener. "We had to completely re-do the kitchen and fix ventilation problems. They weren't equipped for a gas stove." Turns out Six Burner's stove was electric.

Now, an open kitchen is fronted by a bar bathed in red light thanks to Campari bottles strung into pendant lamps. Reclaimed lumber adds texture, but it's Asyera Sidauruk's simple line illustrations on the wall that draw the eye. These chalk compositions use geometric shapes and tucked-away pigs to give the lofty restaurant a homegrown feel. Moxley and Cochener were so pleased they invited her to make a mural at Coda to match.

"WE WANT PEOPLE TO GET THE BEST OF WHAT'S AVAILABLE."

Chef Marco Suarez will do double duty at Canary Square and the Salty Pig, but here the focus is on locally cured meats and artisan cheeses. "It's going to change a lot," adds Cochener. "We want people to be able to get the best of what's available." That means ever-changing pizza toppings (for crusts pulled from the newly installed wood-burning oven) and sandwiches stuffed with all the pig's edible bits.

CAPTAIN PLANET

Getting Earth off the ground

KEN ORINGER MAY BE THE marquee name at the new Earth at Hidden Pond in Kennebunkport, Maine, but chef Kevin Walsh is the one heading the kitchen—with daily guidance from the boss, of course. "If he's not here, he's on the phone with me twice a day," says Walsh, who was most recently chef de cuisine at Deuxave.

DOWN TO IT Ken Oringer

There's a lot to talk about at Earth. Virtually all the beef, seafood and dairy are sourced from within the state, and much of the produce is grown on-site. Resourcefulness is evident in Walsh's favorite dish, in which whey that's left over from the house-made ricotta is used, instead of stock, to braise lamb shoulder. "It adds a little dimension in flavor," says Walsh. Also a draw: the wood-burning oven, which is turning out everything from Margherita pizzas to roasted lobster with green curry butter and grilled lemon.

IN THE LADDER DISTRICT, the former Ivy space has been reborn as 49 Social. Chef Michael Lishchynsky, formerly of the Four Seasons, and beverage guru Kim Frankson, formerly of Radius, are serving up house-made burrata in the salad and braised rabbit in the restaurant's version of a croque-madame. Plus, there are 28 bottles of wine for just $28 each. Sounds convivial.

LOCAL COLOR: Two guys open a bar. One is Paul Murphy, who once ran Brendan Behan's in Jamaica Plain. The other is Dermot Loftus, a Brookline firefighter who used to serve drinks at the Washington Square Tavern. Together, they're the Irish-born spirit behind Porter Café in West Roxbury, a space gutted by a fire back in 2007. Now it's a small (40 seats inside, tiny patio outside) neighborhood spot featuring what Murphy calls "basic American bistro fare" and 60 beers by the bottle, plus over a dozen on tap.

Spreading the Love

In 1992, Carol McManus opened a cramped coffee shop in an annex off Martha's Vineyard's Harborside Inn. She peddled tri-berry muffins, French coffee cake and dark chocolate–dusted iced mochas long before most other cafes had gone gourmet. Nineteen years later, Espresso Love is all grown up and occupying much larger digs up the street. Also older is McManus' son, TJ, who's just opened a second outpost in the Financial District. Like mom, he's offering burgers, salads and a lineup of hearty sandwiches in between.

Drink of the Moment

SUNNY DELIGHT

At the W Hotel, cosmopolitan doesn't mean a passé cocktail. From the lounge scene to the menu at Jean-George's Market to the lobby's design books showing pictures of far-off destinations like Capri and St. Barth's (not to mention the soon-to-open ultra-lounge, Descent), the place projects its brand of glamour. The drink selection is no exception, as proved by the ← KUMQUAT MOJITO ($13). "People will come in and order it when they're thinking, 'I just need some sunshine,'" says bartender Dan Bacigalupo.

It's Cuba-meets-Cebu City in a Collins glass. The recipe calls for fresh kumquat and mint muddled with calamansi, a sour citrus native to the Philippines. When it first debuted, the hard-to-find ingredients had to be couriered from New York by bus several times a week. Oils from the kumquat rind add sweetness to balance the fruit's tart taste, and a burst of soda water brings a hint of bubble to unify the components.

The result is a departure from the familiar mojito. The mint is there, but sugar- and syrup-induced sweetness yield to a citrus juiciness. Bacigalupo pairs the cocktail with bright dishes like rice-cracker-crusted tuna ($15), arugula and radish salad ($9) and key lime pie ($8) to play up the kumquat's flavor. It's a tipple with a vibrant dose of the far-flung. No passport required.

THE TOURIST TRAP

Local history shouldn't be wasted on visitors.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

CITY DWELLERS HAVE A LOVE-hate relationship with tourists. The two key positives are:

A) Their presence reassures urbanites that they live in a place so cool that other people choose to vacation there, and;

B) Tourists spend lots of money.

The negatives include sidewalk-clogging, under-tipping and a manner of dress that makes East Coast elites feel even more superior. Of course, a resident's biggest fear is to be seen as a tourist, effectively being branded as an outsider. The Dutch used to drape unfaithful wives with snakes and parade them through the streets of Amsterdam. That's probably what it's like being caught taking a trolley tour.

Fear and shame mean that many Bostonians' knowledge of their heritage ends with foggy memories of high school history class. But an out-of-town guest is an opportunity for a refresher course. My girlfriend had visitors, a newly married Texan couple, so for two days we whirled through the city. I'd say I went through the gauntlet so you don't have to, but, at some point, you should. Just don't start at Cheers.

"You should have no inherent reason to go here," said the confused husband, watching young foreigners snap photos by the bar's entrance. Cheers went off the air 18 years ago, so I couldn't actually explain the appeal of Sam Malone bobbleheads or headshots of a sassy Shelley Long. I doubt WKRP in Cincinnati is flooded with sightseers. Perhaps the crowds are drawn by the enduring sex appeal of Kirstie Alley.

Tougher explanations continued across the street, though I bet most conversations about the Swan Boats go this way:

Husband: So you don't go anywhere?

Me: Nope.

Husband: And you don't row or paddle or anything?

Me: No, only the dude in the back.

Husband: Poor bastard.

Once we hit the Freedom Trail, things got more educational. We visited the final resting places of Samuel Adams and Mother Goose at the Granary Burying Ground, or, as I had previously known it, that creepy graveyard by the Beantown Pub.

Down the block sits the Omni Parker House Hotel, home of the three most interesting pieces of Boston trivia that I know, and that I repeat at every opportunity: Malcolm X was a bellman there, Ho Chi Minh was a baker, and it's the birthplace of Boston Cream Pie. We stopped in for a taste in a gift shop full of "Pahk the Cah in Hahvad Yahd" T-shirts. I learned that I prefer the Dunkin' Donuts version, which I think actually makes me a more authentic local.

The search for trivia continued after a brief stop at what our guests referred to as "Nathaniel Hall." There's not a whole lot to grab your attention—they have Gaps in Houston—but we did see two separate buskers playing pan flutes, which provided a haunting soundtrack for our walk to the Union Oyster House.

Over pints of local beer, we learned that the restaurant played host to the first recorded use of the toothpick. King-to-be Louis Phillipe lived upstairs, tutoring, and probably bedding, the neighborhood girls. Heady stuff.

From there we hit the North End, passing my least favorite attraction, Paul Revere's house—he lived there for seven years; it's like visiting where John Hancock bought his quills—and stopping at my favorite, the Old North Church. They say the crypt is stacked with dead redcoats. As a neighbor who believes in ghosts, that's frightening to hear.

The quintessential capper was the Duck Tour. Aboard "Tub of the Hub," we learned about the official children's book of the Commonwealth (Make Way for Ducklings) and its official stone (Roxbury pudding). And, driving past Copley Square, we saw another pan flutist. Said the husband, "Maybe it's the official music of the Commonwealth."

I've visited lots of cities in my time and retained very little information. But after our weekend tour, my daily commute is enriched. In the Back Bay, I'm now reminded of Zabdiel Boylston, who fought smallpox. When I pass Gilbert Stuart's gravestone on the Common, I know that he painted the portrait on the dollar bill, and is surrounded by dead British soldiers (they're everywhere, it's terrifying). Like youth on the young, local history is often wasted on Midwesterners. I'm not saying you wait in line for an hour for a cannoli from Mike's Pastry, but it might not hurt to brush up on the Battle of Bunker Hill. At the very least, you'll have an alternative should your old college roommate want to sit on Norm's barstool. ✖✖✖

GETTING BOOKED

TO MY LOVING SISTER: You're 31 years old. Stop acting like a 12-year-old! I had hurt my ankle, a fact you knew, and I couldn't walk on it. An afternoon of lounging in bed came to a halt when you decided to play a game of "facebook." No, this isn't when you poke people or make fun of pictures. It's when you smack someone in the face with an actual book. In an attempt to avoid a face full of Harry Potter, you succeeded in getting me off the bed, and I landed right on my ankle. Let's hope hot soaks and some deserved good karma will help me out. I prefer Kindles

To the cad on the #92 bus:
We rode the bus together during rush hour on Thursday morning. I hope your stupid gym bag had a nice ride on the filled-to-capacity bus as others (including me) stood for the entire trip. I tried to get your attention for a seat, but you were too self-absorbed with your iPhone, probably sending notes to yourself. I hope you break both legs.

Another disgruntled commuter

To 'working mom' in the Porsche convertible:
You flew down the left lane on Beacon Street and unsuccessfully tried to cut me off. At the next light, you let loose and started screaming. Here are some useful facts to help you through the day: 1) Sometimes you have to wait for what you want. Clearly, that's a new concept for you. 2) Lesser cars with the right-of-way tend to win. 3) Your children cheer when you go on business trips.

PRO OF CON

The true story of a colossal fraud

LONG BEFORE THE MAN born Christian Gerhartsreiter successfully wriggled into the Clark Rockefeller identity and Boston high society—cavorting at the Algonquin Club and the Athenaeum, dangerously close to actual Rockefellers—he'd assumed other fake identities, crisply aristocratic names like "Chichester" and "Mountbatten."

In his study of the career of a consummate fraud, Mark Seal talked to almost 200 people, and his interviews with Gerhartsreiter's credulous victims, at the time star-struck by the Rockefeller name, are as riveting as the man himself. Gerhartsreiter combined a bold social presence with slithering elusiveness. His professed employments included physics, government, TV production and corporate positions, though all were marvelously free of ever having to go to a pesky office. He did know computers, suggesting a pinch of credibility. But his wealthy wife, Sandra, admitted she'd been duped, claiming ignorance of his background and finances, and describing him as angry and controlling, in contrast to his persona as an urbane, educated gentleman. She left their precocious daughter, Reigh, largely in his cocoon-ish care. ("We are adults. We like adult menus," said the little girl.)

The Man In The Rockefeller Suit
by Mark Seal

Part of the story takes place in Boston.

Eventually, his identity unraveled and he kidnapped Reigh, leading to jail and suspicion in the murder of a couple with whom he had a sinister connection in 1985. ×××

FROM PAGE 135: "When he entered the magnificent Gothic church he had an equally magnificent name and a meticulously researched persona to go with it. 'Hello,' he greeted his fellow worshippers in his perfectly enunciated East Coast prep school accent, wearing a blue blazer and private club necktie, which he would usually accent with khaki pants embroidered with tiny ducks, hounds, or bumblebees, worn always with Top-Sider boat shoes without socks. His voice was as distinctive as his attire, a deep hypnotic melody coming from the back of his throat, a voice that, to his mind and those who met him during this defining epoch was the epitome of good-breeding, vast wealth and impeccable taste. 'Clark,' he said, 'Clark Rockefeller.'"

STREET TALK

Patricia Yeo brings bold South Asian flavors to Om.

Om Restaurant | Lounge
92 Winthrop St., Cambridge
(617-576-2800)
omrestaurant.com

SINK OR SWIM Trout roasted in banana leaf is one of Yeo's welcome new additions.

WHEN OM ARRIVED five years ago, it was as though a Tribeca lounge (with prices to match) had materialized out of whole cloth in tweedy Harvard Square. The restaurant's Zen design, international DJs, Asian-fusion cuisine and lavender cosmos were straight out of Sex and the City. Several chefs later, Om has retained those dated trappings: Downstairs, the dim lounge hosts a clubby set enjoying colorful cocktails and naan pizza, while upstairs, stone Buddhas serenely observe diners tucking into their momos. But while the decor hasn't changed, the menu has benefitted from an update, thanks to New York transplant chef Patricia Yeo. After the South End's Ginger Park shut its doors last year, Bobby Flay's former protégée is heading the kitchens of Om and its sister restaurant, Moska, slated to open this fall in Central Square.

Ginger Park fans will find much to like on Om's new rotating menu. Yeo's recent cooking tour of Southeast Asia means there's a heavy emphasis on street food, especially among the appetizers. Not surprisingly, that's where her cooking shines with bold flavors and the liberal use of ingredients like fish sauce and chilies. Thai fried chicken ($14) stood out with its shrimp paste and red curry honey glaze, lending the thigh and leg meat a superb umami dimension. Unfortunately, the duck balls ($14), a Ginger Park favorite, were laced with a five-alarm green curry that had me gasping for water. In contrast, a Vietnamese imperial roll ($12), like so many of the dishes featuring crab, tasted bland and unremarkable. The daikon, pear and edamame salad ($9) was a refreshing, crunchy palate cleanser of thinly sliced radish, Asian pears and a sweet vinaigrette. Om's signature plate, the momos and dumplings ($14), made an ideal group appetizer. It came with four kinds of dumplings (chicken, mushroom, crab and pork) and three sauces (Dijon mustard, carrot ketchup and a chili soy). Of the sauces, the carrot ketchup, with its bright orange color and undercurrent of spice, was the most compelling, but the dumplings were standard fare you could get for a lot less in Chinatown.

B.N.'s Picks

Though appetizers were on the pricey side, their cost corresponded with generous portions. Unfortunately, that formula didn't hold with the main courses, which abandoned street food for fusion. Thirty-five dollars seemed mighty exorbitant for a lobster lo mein that contained few noodles or shellfish. A tamarind-glazed wild salmon ($28) was expertly cooked, on the rare side, but a sauceless spring roll and vinaigrette-free cucumber salad detracted from the flavorful fish. The best main was trout roasted in banana leaf ($26), which came lathered in a pungent fish sauce and green curry. Enhanced by smokiness from the grilled leaf wrapper, the dish was a welcome return to the confident flavors of the first courses.

Desserts ($6 each) were also inconsistent. The panna cotta was a delicious, dense dark-chocolate pudding, but the signature sticky-rice fritters tasted overcooked and were underserved by an overly tart passion fruit purée. An accompanying coconut sorbet, at least, lent some sweetness. As might be expected in a restaurant with a popular lounge, cocktails are reliably tasty, especially the Jetsetter No. 5 ($10), Om's version of a Sazerac. I also had a smooth 14 Hands cabernet sauvignon ($9), which paired well with the eclectic offerings—even the salmon—without overpowering them.

When dishes worked at Om, their assertiveness was a revelation, but more often than not, the menu played it safe. Hopefully, with more fine-tuning, Yeo's offerings will embrace the bold, adventurous, street-fare side of the menu. ✖✖✖

FAIR PLAY

Paying for an advantage isn't cheating; it's tradition.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

MY PARENTS WERE hippies, and my childhood was filled with granola and compost. As an adult, my flower-child upbringing carries peculiar benefits. For instance, if I'm ever in the mood to freak someone out, I can drive to Newburyport, knock on the door of a particular house and inform the owners that I was born in their bathtub. (Hospitals are where the man wants you to be born!) Hopefully they've remodeled.

While I spent my childhood going to Bob Dylan concerts and stacking wood for our Scandinavian stove, other kids were skiing and playing golf—you know, mindlessly embracing the bourgeois leisure pursuits of the oppressive patriarchal power structure. I didn't realize that I wanted to be a stuffy rich guy until I got to college, and by then it was too late. If you're not playing golf by age six, you may as well not bother. I mean, if a finely tuned athletic specimen such as myself can't get the hang of it, then there's really no hope for anyone.

I've taken lessons. I've practiced at the driving range. I bought a driver with a club head the size of a wheel of Parmesan. But I'm still bad at golf, and I've reconciled myself to that reality. When I take a swing at a ball, I look like a caveman learning to use kitchen utensils. There's no hope for me.

Or is there? I recently read about a golf ball that got banned by the USGA back in 1981. It's called the Polara Ultimate Straight, and the manufacturer claims the ball flies straight up to 75 percent of the time. In the name of investigative journalism—and of hustling money from my friends—I bought a box of Polaras and put that claim to the test. I had to order them online (about $38 a dozen, with shipping) since they're not sold in Massachusetts, which added to the illicit appeal. On my way to the course, I was careful not to get pulled over, lest a cop find my stash of primo stuff. "Polaras, son? I thought you said there was no contraband in this vehicle. You're on your way to Mexico to trade these for doobies and booger sugar, aren't you?"

If you want to be a purist, go walk around a field in Scotland whacking a dried sheep bladder.

Since golf is only interesting if you're playing it, and actually not even then, I won't bore you with the details of my Polara-juiced round. But I will say that their claim is true: aided by the banned balls, I crushed drives dead down the middle, my horrific slice magically corrected. The balls are labeled with an arrow, and you simply point the arrow where you want it to go. Then, somehow, it does.

After one staggering drive, my brother-in-law, Rick, rolled up in the cart and declared, "Cheater!" To which I replied that he was also a cheater, given the PGA's stance on golf carts (i.e., you can't use a cart, but you can use an actual human being, a person with hopes and dreams and possibly a family, to carry all your heavy stuff like a bipedal mule).

The Polaras shaved a few strokes off my game, but I was still the worst player in our group. However, I normally have a very short attention span where golf is concerned—after about an hour, I'm so frustrated that I'm skipping holes to practice bootleg turns with the cart. The Polaras, though, had me looking forward to every tee shot, when I could rear back and crush the ball down the fairway just like someone who knows what he's doing. Admittedly, I don't, but was I cheating?

I say no. Paying for an unfair advantage is a time-honored strategy. As Don McLean sang in "American Pie," "Bye, bye Miss American Pie / Drove my Chevy to the levee, but the levee was dry / So I bought a Go Fast Pass at Six Flags and got to ride the water-slides while everyone else waited in line like a bunch of idiots." Look, if the Supreme Court says that corporations can make unlimited campaign donations—otherwise known as paying for an advantage—then who am I to shun the humble Polara?

If you want to be a purist, then go walk around a field in Scotland whacking a dried sheep bladder with a piece of driftwood, which I'm pretty sure is the deranged, whiskey-induced recreational activity that spawned this dumb sport. Meanwhile, I'll be teeing up my $3 golf balls and out-driving the guys who started playing when they were toddlers. What am I supposed to do—practice until I'm good, like some kind of foreigner? I may have been born in a bathtub, but it wasn't yesterday. ✖✖✖

The Collins Card { CHRIS COLLINS }

CRAP OUT

The Sox rolled with Dice and lost.

DAISUKE MATSUZAKA was going to be special. He was young. He was cocky. He was fast. He was going to make the Red Sox Japan's team. Matsuzaka was the man of many pitches, including the secret weapon that sounded like a sandwich, "the gyroball." At this point, I think we all feel like we've had our lunch money stolen.

In 2007, Dice-K fever was something to behold. It was a surreal time, as the Red Sox brass traveled west on owner John Henry's plane to go toe-to-toe with the biggest money-grubber in sport: superagent Scott Boras.

In the end, Boras accepted the organization's take-it-or-leave-it offer of $52 million over six years, not including the $51,111,111.11 fee the Red Sox had to wire to Matsuzaka's team in Japan.

I remember the introductory press conference. Henry, ever the quiet pessimist, warned the Nation to dial back its expectations for the upcoming season. He was correct to do so. Matsuzaka was merely serviceable as a 26-year-old "rookie," going 15-12 with a 4.40 ERA.

While his numbers in year two appear impressive—18-3 with a 2.90 ERA—the on-field performance was disappointing. He couldn't finish the seventh inning in 21 of his 29 starts. In reality, his stellar record was due to the performance of a far more impressive bullpen.

Overall, his numbers here in Boston are 49 wins, 30 losses and a 4.25 ERA. On paper, those are decent statistics. But the fans who watched Matsuzaka pitch know the true story. They can sum up the Dice-K era with one word: Frustrating.

Now he's set to undergo Tommy John surgery, which means his career in Boston is probably over. He will need at least 12 months to recover, which brings us to the middle of next season.

Michael Ivins / Boston Red Sox

In a smaller market, the folks in the front office would cross their fingers and hope their pitcher could be a decent starter again. The Red Sox do not play in that kind of market. The Sox must compete for a championship every year, so they can't sit around hoping for "decent."

What happened? How did Matsuzaka go from phenom to bust?

It would be easy to bring the blame down on general manager Theo Epstein. Even though Matsuzaka had his moments, the wildly expensive signing may prove to be Epstein's biggest whiff as GM. But the problem with blaming the boss and the Red Sox scouting staff is that everybody around the Majors was seeing the same thing, and everybody wanted Matsuzaka.

He was the star of two World Baseball Classics, which is the biggest stage you can occupy outside of the World Series. But to be "the man" on a Major League roster, you have to command the mound every fifth day. And for reasons that range from injury to general stubbornness, Matsuzaka never pitched with consistency.

Matsuzaka started 32, 29, 12, 25 and seven games in his first five years with the Sox. Those aren't terrible stats, but they're not worth forking over $103 million. I suspected that the Sox recouped some of that investment, given how high Dice-K's profile is in Japan (one of the Red Sox's greatest strengths is wringing all possible profit from every revenue stream). But after talking with Sox COO Sam Kennedy, I learned this wasn't exactly the case.

Kennedy told me the Sox sell and market the team based on many factors: the competitiveness of the club, the Fenway Park experience and more. No one player translates into business success; the success of the team is exponentially more important. When Matsuzaka joined the roster, they did add a new sponsor, and his presence added to the overall interest in the club. But an uptick in interest doesn't translate to a financial windfall.

In terms of performance, Matsuzaka's problems seem to be a systemic issue with Asian pitchers. They start off with a bang, and then they become journeymen hurlers, see: Chan Ho Park, Hideo Nomo and Hideki Irabu.

The Yankees have made similar mistakes. New York GM Brian Cashman shelled out $46 million to Japanese pitcher Kei Igawa, who was last seen in the big leagues in 2008.

There are more foreign pitchers on the radar. Next in line is Yu Darvish. He's 24, a year younger than Matsuzaka was when the Sox came calling, and he's currently dominating Japanese hitters with a blazing fastball.

I have some advice for Epstein. Don't give in to temptation. I can deal with a lost opportunity. I just can't deal with the frustration of another former sure-thing. ×××

CONGRATULATIONS

BOSTON BRUINS

2011 Stanley Cup
CHAMPIONS
From the staff at The Improper Bostonian

IMPERATIVES

TAKE 5

The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON PAPI, LEBRON AND THE VICTORIOUS BRUINS

5 ON THE STANLEY CUP CHAMPS

GOAL ORIENTED Horton was key in the clutch.

Anything's Possible I picked the Bruins to lose in Vancouver, mostly because I couldn't imagine a world in which they were Stanley Cup champs. In 31 years, I'd never seen them win; it never even felt like they had a legitimate shot. But here we are. Never thought I'd live to see the day, but happy that I did.

He Is Legend Tim Thomas is probably the most normal sports hero in Boston history. He's not freakishly tall or blindingly fast. He doesn't have a 36-inch vertical and isn't cut like "Ravishing" Rick Rude. He's just an everyday, Drew Carey-looking, Al Borland-sounding dude from Michigan. And right now he's the best goalie in the world. Man, we've come a long way since Tuukka Time.

Scrappy Doos Some have resisted the Brad Marchand/Dustin Pedroia comparison, but I'm sorry, it has to be made. Marchand's the scrappiest hockey player I've ever seen. Granted, I started watching two weeks ago, but still, the Little Rat embodies everything a young Pedroia did for the Sox. Marchand is Pedroia, Pedroia is Marchand, and this section may look hypocritical later in the column Going the Distance The Bruins are only the second team* in pro-sports history to win three Game 7s in the same playoffs, and while the finale was obviously most important, don't forget who delivered game-winners in the first two: Nathan Horton. It's a shame his season ended early, but if not for him, so would've the Bruins'. The other team was the 1988 Lakers, but that's where the comparison ends until Claude Julien steps up his hair-gel game.*

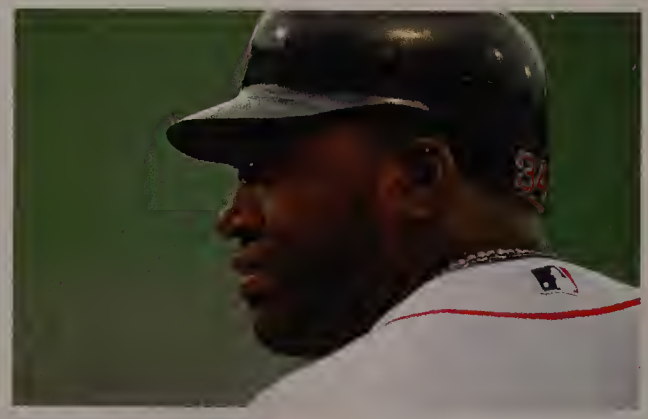
To the Real Fans Congrats to the Bruins fans who were fans prior to this season, to those who suffered through all the incompetence and heartbreak of the last 39 years and earned ultimate vindication for their unconditional love. Man, 1972… that was only Mark Recchi's, like, third year in the league!

4 DATES TO WATCH

6/23: And with the first pick in the NBA Draft, the Cleveland Cavaliers select… one very disappointed young man.

6/24: The NHL Draft kicks off in Minnesota, where the Bruins draft ninth. Also, just a reminder: The Bruins won the Stanley-effing Cup.



6/28: The Sox head south for a three-game series with the Phillies. If Halladay/Lee/Hamels can't quiet the Sox bats, may God have mercy on the rest of the league.

7/1: Czar Stern nestles down for what should be a long NBA labor dispute. In the interim, he plans to pay the bills using 15-years worth of Rasheed Wallace fine money.

1 ONE SEE YOU LATER

This marks the last time I'll mention the NFL in this column until the lockout's lifted and football resumes. You hear that, Robert Kraft? Not one mention! Also, while I've got your ear: How about making it fun to go to Gillette again? That place is a prison.

3 ON THE RUNAWAY RED SOX

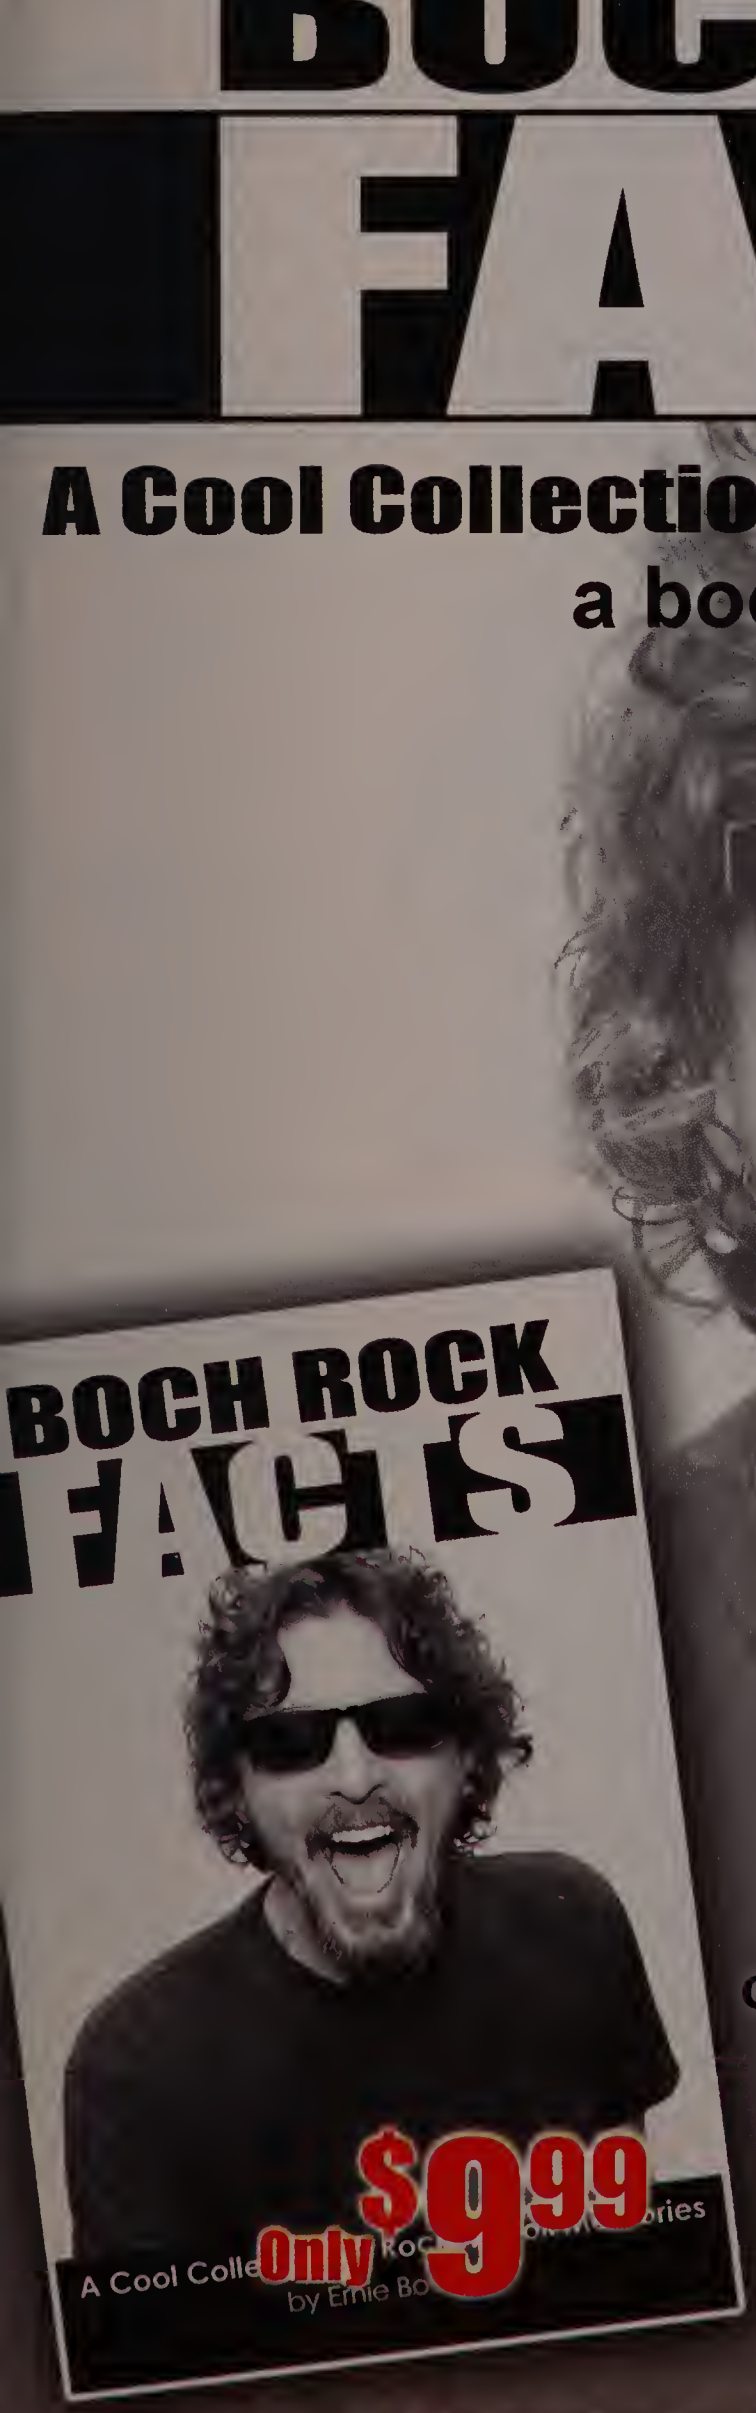
Crown 'Em! With hockey and hoops done for the year, the Sox are all we have. Not a bad thing if you like winning baseball, but if you're looking for drama? This won't be your summer. The Sox are about to run away with the division. The fat lady hasn't sung yet, but I've got Bartolo Colón on speed dial. Stay ready, buddy. Gonna need those pipes!

Paying the Papi I need a little more time to digest what's happening with David Ortiz. Honestly, I figured a post-juicing Papi would just fizzle out in the final year of his contract and walk away at season's end. I was wrong. Papi's back and playing like a guy who not only wants to get paid, but deserves to be.

Aces Wild I've got no problem with the Sox bats. Who doesn't love watching them deliver beating after beating? But for me, there's nothing better than seeing Jon Lester and Josh Beckett work their magic. I'd take a gem from one of the aces before any offensive outburst. That's what will carry them in the end (and also what keeps games under six hours).

2 FINAL THOUGHTS ON THE NBA FINALS

Super Schadenfreude Not that you need another reason to get off on Miami's choke job, but here's one anyway: The Celtics are right back in the hunt. Listen, I'm not saying they'll have a great chance in 2012, but with LeMentalPatient and Co. back at square one, the stable C's might sneak back into the fray. As long as they can find a center, and as long as there's a season.



Holy Hasselhoff Because Dirk Nowitzki's a lanky blond white guy with a jumper, he's always been compared to Larry Bird. And that's always driven me nuts. But now that Dirk's reached Nirvana, it's time to either let him stand on his own among the all-time greats, or find a new white player to relentlessly deem "the Next Dirk." (I, for one, nominate DeShawn Stevenson.)

Soroff On JESSALYN GILSIG

The ubiquitous TV actress talks about Friday Night Lights, underwhelming ants and, of course, the kids on Glee.

TELEVISION ACTRESS JESSALYN GILSIG, 40, WAS BORN AND RAISED in Montreal and studied acting at the American Repertory Theater in Cambridge. Along with numerous stage credits in off-Broadway productions, she appeared in films like The Horse Whisperer, Prom Night and The Stepfather, but first rose to prominence on David E. Kelley's TV drama Boston Public. After taking a hiatus from the small screen to return to the stage, Gilsig went back to Los Angeles to star in hit shows like Prison Break, Heroes, CSI: NY, Friday Night Lights and Nip/Tuck. She currently stars as Terri Schuester on the wildly successful Glee. She lives in Los Angeles with her daughter.

Jonathan Soroff: Let's discuss your name.
Jessalyn Gilsig: I think it's the original Gaelic of the name Jocelyn. I was once in Tiffany's, buying a gift, and the woman said, "Oh, Jessalyn will help you." I said, "Is your name Jessalyn? Mine is too!" And she said, "No. It's just me and some girl on TV."

Is Glee the biggest juggernaut you've ever been connected with?
I would say yes, but it's much more intense for the kids. I haven't experienced what they have, because my role isn't so prominent. The kids freaking out part is something I've never had before, and I feel this very maternal need to defuse the situation and say, "It's not that interesting that I'm on Glee."

Weirdest fan encounter?
I was just in Istanbul, where I didn't think anyone watched the show, and this guy came up to me. I assumed he was hitting on me, and finally he said, "You are Mrs. Schuester!" I had to beg him not to tell anybody. It has a crazy reach. Then again, I was in Montreal, in line at a store, when a woman said, "Are you…" And I said, "Yes, I am." And she said, "Sharon Patterson's daughter?" I had to dig myself out of that one.

Is Glee as huge in Canada as it is here?
Oh, yeah. People just love it so much, and it touches people in a way that no other television show I know of has. A flight attendant on Air Canada gave me free cheese and crackers.

Do you feel maternal toward the Glee kids?
Oh, yes. When Chris Colfer first started, he was really young, maybe 18, and had never lived away from home. I said, "Your mom must be so proud. Has she come to see your new apartment?" And he was like, "Not yet," and I kept saying, "Chris, you have to invite her to see it," and finally he said, "I don't know why you're going on about it. It's just my mom." I was like, "Ouch! I'm a mom." I'm sure he was thinking, "Listen, old lady, I don't want my mom all up in my space." It was hilarious.

What would you like to erase from your resume?
[Laughs.] I'd say Destination: Infestation, the original title of which was Ants on a Plane. It called for Antonio Sabàto Jr. and I to respond with sheer terror to a few little ants. We were battling them, and the budget was so low, they said they'd be adding more ants afterward, presumably in coach. But we had to react to them as if it was a huge swarm, and then they didn't add them, so we were freaking out over the number of ants you'd see on your front path. And halfway through the movie, they couldn't get anymore of the black ants they'd been using, so they had to switch to yellow ones, which was never adequately explained. But you gotta pay the bills somehow.

Did Nip/Tuck teach you about plastic surgery?
I think that show was so genius, and it really addressed the issues of superficiality and vanity. In the pilot, they did a nose job, and the consultant told us that the force with which you have to break a nose in order to fix it is the same as going through the windshield of a car. Plastic surgery is brutal.

Are you as libidinous as Gina, your Nip/Tuck character?
[Laughs.] I wish I had a little more Gina in me. I adored her so much. That role was such a gift. Usually, you play a part and it's a character you create. With her, I almost felt like she existed independently of me in some way. I'm not as direct as she is. I'm not as sexually overt. I'm not as manipulative.

Who was at the American Repertory Theater when you were there?
The one we all idolized was Cherry Jones. I remember Felicity Huffman.

Is Friday Night Lights the most underrated TV show in history?
Absolutely. Just performance-wise, it's so incredible. I think that show and All in the Family are the two most authentic depictions of a marriage on American television. I've played so many wives clutching their cardigans and deferring to their husbands. That's not how anybody acts. I think the complexities of that show are astonishing.

Do you feel like you owe everything to David E. Kelley for casting you in Boston Public*?*
I guess I do. But I feel like that show was something of a personal failure. I wasn't ready for that opportunity, and it overwhelmed me. I was like a deer in the headlights. I actually asked to leave the show after two years and moved back to New York to do theater. When I came back, I was back at square one, and I wasn't even sure if I wanted to stay in the business. But that show gave me my first break, and I probably owe my career to it.

Person you're most often mistaken for?
[Laughs.] People sometimes say, "She's like Kelly Preston only with a big nose." Some people really hate my nose. And then I remember some FOX executives sitting me down and saying, "Look. We obviously have to deal with the fact that some press is going to say you look like Michelle Pfeiffer [David E. Kelley's wife]." And I was like, "Umm, OK. They can mistake me for her anytime!"

So how long do you think the Glee phenomenon will last?
Good question. Someone just said to me the other day that they couldn't believe it was only the second season because it's hard to remember a world before Glee. The show may not sustain, but the concept of kids finding their voice and self-acceptance and acceptance of others will probably open up into other things, and it will always be a part of the fans' lives. ✖✖✖

IF YOU CAN'T DO CANNES... TRY NEWPORT.

MOVIE BUFFS AND gossip junkies dream of strolling the streets of Cannes, France, in search of stars, but you don't need to hit the Riviera to get your Hollywood-by-the-sea fix. Try the 90-minute drive to Newport, R.I., playground of bolded names like Ed Norton, Brad Pitt and Bruce Willis.

Steeped in the decadent history of America's Gilded Age, Newport boasts top-notch shopping, snacking and sunning. Most of the Bellevue Avenue mansions, one-time homes to Bancrofts, Astors and Vanderbilts, are open for public gawking, the most intriguing being Rough Point. The summer cottage of tobacco heiress Doris Duke houses her hodgepodge of tapestries, antiques and opulent accoutrements before splitting off into a year-long exhibit dedicated to her clothing—a collection of mid-century sportswear from labels like Gucci, Halston and Valentino.

A short trip down Ocean Drive brings you to Castle Hill Inn, a sprawling resort complete with its own lighthouse and coastal walking trail. Each manicured inch of the 40-acre peninsula encourages guests to take a breather and enjoy the views of the mainland across the bay. The turret-topped main house was once home to renowned scientist Alexander Agassiz, and has hosted guests from Mark Twain to momentary Celtic Shaquille O'Neal and his Flavor-ful girlfriend, Hoopz.

The building holds nine guest rooms and four dining rooms overlooking the lawn, but the property stretches to include a private chalet and cottages. The luxurious beach-house rooms are equipped with kitchenettes and private decks that look directly out onto the shore and are connected by a path leading to the resort's private sand.

Although Castle Hill offers in-room treatments, massage connoisseurs should try the spa at the Vanderbilt Grace hotel. A hot stone massage uses local stones and lava rocks as tools rather than as simple heat conductors. Nearby, a strip of recently revamped storefronts houses boutiques like Angela Moore and Calvet Sacs & Bagages, a chi-chi handbag collection whose quality and exotic skins rival Hermès.

For dinner, the farm-to-table trend is evoked wonderfully at hot spots like Tallulah on Thames, Fluke Wine, Bar & Kitchen and the dockside Mooring Seafood Kitchen & Bar. At Castle Hill, executive chef Jonathan Cambra plates up dishes that showcase vegetables grown on-site and locally sourced proteins. And there's a special luxury in knowing your tautog was caught just yards from where you're sitting. ✱

IF YOU CAN'T DO ICELAND... TRY PLUM ISLAND

IF YOUR IDEAL VACATION is a mix of simple pleasures and outdoor adventure, a trip to Iceland is probably on your bucket list. Visitors flock there for its nature tourism (the island's a prime location for hiking and bird-watching), seafood and bargains on Scandinavian designs. The problem is that Iceland's practically in the Arctic Circle, and it keeps erupting with lava. For a less geothermal getaway, try Newburyport. The commuter rail or bus will get you there faster than you can say Eyjafjallajökull, while taxi company London Livery eliminates any need for a car as it shuttles visitors throughout the area and onto nearby Plum Island in London-style cabs.

Everyone's first destination on Plum Island should be the 4,662-acre Parker River National Wildlife Refuge. It boasts miles of hiking trails where you can spy birds like bald eagles and snowy owls. Inside, Mass Audubon's Joppa Flats Education Center features marine tanks, art exhibits and butterfly gardens. Alternately, get a duck's-eye view on a boat tour of the area's salt and freshwater marshes led by Plum Island Kayak.

Adjacent to the refuge, Blue, the Inn on the Beach is an elegant seaside spot offering cool amenities like outdoor Jacuzzis that overlook the Atlantic. From a walkway paved in blue glass marbles to the picnic-basket breakfast that's delivered each morning, the inn's details balance simplicity with refinement. The deck overlooking a private beach is the perfect spot to watch the fog roll over the island.

For fresh seafood, try the "grille board" at Plum Island Grille and enjoy the catch of the day dished up with your choice of sauces from chef/owner Francis Broadbery (try the pickled jalapeño tartar). Or just sit at the deck bar with the crowd of locals that gathers each evening to watch the sunset. The only other on-island evening establishment, the Beachcoma, is supposed

For a break from Plum Island's "everybody knows your name" vibe, cross the Wilkinson Bridge into Newburyport. Despite its pocket size, Newburyport has cultural depth and cosmopolitan charm. The Tannery Marketplace combines independent galleries, home decor stores and cafes inside a repurposed mill. Be sure to visit its Jabberwocky Bookshop, which, with its wide range of art, travel, fiction and used books, embodies the town's cultural mélange. More whimsical, perhaps, is Somerby's Landing Sculpture Park and Oldies, a treasure trove of antiques like cocktail hats from the '40s, suits of armor, old woodworking tools and tchotchkes galore. Then rest your shopping-bag muscles at Spa Paradiso and Salon, a friendly, holistically inclined day spa with a knack for massage.

Within earshot of Market Square's street performances, Ceia Kitchen + Bar features sophisticated fare from executive chef Billy Brandolini. Since opening the restaurant in December, the 23-year-old's banana brûlée has become a town favorite. After dessert, raise a glass at the Grog and Thirsty Whale pubs.*

IF YOU CAN'T DO ST. MORITZ... TRY STOWE

TODAY IT'S A HAVEN for the rich, the titled and the paparazzi, but the cash-soaked playground of St. Moritz wasn't always built on snow. As far back as the Middle Ages, travelers trudged up the Swiss mountainsides for their health, to take the mineral waters and the pristine air. It was only when 19th-century hoteliers invented the winter sports industry that the Alps became synonymous with hurtling downhill on sticks.

Closer to home, clean air and luxury mud wraps draw summer tourists to Vermont's Stowe Mountain (it's one of New England's great clichés that the Green Mountains are the local equivalent of the Swiss Alps, but it's true). At the base of the grassy slopes sits Stowe Mountain Lodge, a $125-million confection of timber, high-end amenities and Polo Ralph Lauren boutiques. The six-story hotel cribs from summer camp aesthetics with its open layout, birch bark columns and cyclopean fireplaces, but the rooms are five-star urban comfort.

Driving up Route 108 to the Lodge takes you past scores of restaurants and maple syrup boutiques, but once you valet your car, there's little reason to leave the shadow of Mount Mansfield. Entering the lobby, the mountains are drawn into the interior decor, framed by giant windows that flood the hotel with light, color and a sense of crippling inadequacy in the face of nature's overwhelming grandeur. Luckily, there's a bar to assuage any existential crises.

Many of the rooms are located a brisk 5-minute trot to the south, which takes you past the outdoor swimming pool—heated to 86 degrees in the summer, although its accompanying Jacuzzis are significantly hotter. Mark the fire pit and make a mental note to take a poolside cocktail at sunset.

Stowe Mountain Lodge's rooms are decked with the inevitable LCD screens, iPod docks and stone-framed fireplaces, but they also nod to Vermont's greenery by stocking organic cotton towels and environmentally friendly bath products. An ideal of "wellness," too, carries over in the state-of-the-art, 21,000-square-foot spa. Like the rest of the Lodge, the spa is designed with an eye towards the environment. The changing rooms, for instance, exit onto a snaking stone corridor that evokes the feel of flowing water. It's the "Signature Sacred Rituals," however, that are most distinctive. In the "Sacred Journey," you're heavily massaged, cocooned in a hot mud wrap and rubbed with oils of bergamot, basil, nutmeg, lemon and cardamom, like a pampered Sunday roast. Particular emphasis is placed on working the hands, feet and head, which, when combined with the pungent spices and the smothering mud, leaves you with all the tension of a wet sponge.

The natural theme carries over to the hotel restaurant, Solstice, where Chef Cody Vasek's menu leans heavily on nearby farms and organic foods. He distills Vermont onto a plate with dishes like spring lamb with local blueberries and watercress puree, and his selection of local cheeses is profound. *

IF YOU CAN'T DO THE COSTA DEL SOL...TRY NANTUCKET

Jeff Allen

IN THE WARM CHURN OF THE harbor at Puerto Banus, Spain, the king of Saudi Arabia anchors his yacht against a backdrop of marble shopping malls, coke-dusted dance clubs and Vuitton. An ocean away in Nantucket Sound, hygienic couples with matching Labradors stroll a marina in which the flashiest attraction is the Ms. Pac-Man machine at Cap'n Tobey's Chowder House. Both towns are playgrounds for the rich, and if the lilies are more thickly gilded in the Mediterranean, the fenced driveways on Cliff Road hide many a secret Bentley.

After disembarking from one of the fast ferries ("Welcome to Martha's Vineyard!" is the inevitable chestnut delivered by the sailor on the gangplank), stroll up the cobbles past carefully tended 18th-century architecture toward the Nantucket Island Chamber of Commerce for a map and events guide. Do not wear heels, as the cobbles seem to have been planted by a deranged bonesetter. Immediately around the corner, the Union Street Inn is a 1770 whaling captain's house that's had the draftiness and fish smell removed, and amenities like Frette linens and cooked-to-order breakfast in bed added. The result is a boutique B&B with a French accent, run by Ken and Deb Withrow (Ken used to manage Chicago's Le Méridien, Deb was at Henri Bendel in New York City). It's intimate enough that you hear the other guests' footsteps creaking on the stairs, but the Fresh bath products, afternoon baked treats and understated charm more than make up for any unexpected neighborliness.

For less emphasis on homemade carrot cake and more on sea algae facials, the White Elephant is a sparkling luxury "inn" with one foot in the resort world. Rooms are decked in tasteful whites and nautical art, with ocean views brushing the scene in cobalt. Its restaurant, the Brant Point Grill, commands a lordly view of the harbor and an even lordlier steak and seafood menu. The spa, too, is noteworthy. Nantucket isn't overwhelmed with massage options, and the treatments here are delivered with the grace and service of a big city hotel.

A short stroll up Federal Street is Ventuno, a new Italian venture from chef/owners Gabriel Frasca and Amanda Lydon. The colonial architecture, dark wood and muted decor keep the dining room in the tradition of 21 Federal—the space's previous, yachty incarnation. As would be expected, fresh-made pastas are the true standouts here, although the roasted beef marrow with pine nuts and pickled vegetables is worth at least a trip to the bar. Alternately, walk to the top of Centre Street, where American Seasons has long established itself as a destination for creative reinventions of classic dishes like New England fluke with lobster vinaigrette and lemon confit. ✱

JET-SETTERS LIKE TORY Burch, Lenny Kravitz and Elle Macpherson are drawn to the Bahamas' Harbour Island for its breezy glamour, while some of the world's most prestigious bloodlines—aristocrats, politicians, celebrities, magnates—have made the WASPy enclave their vacation hub since the 1950s. Of course, trains don't run there from North Station, and there's no convenient interstate across the Caribbean. Better to just hit Maine's Kennebunk and Kennebunkport.

A good place to begin a visit is by checking in at the resort village of Hidden Pond, near the secluded Goose Rocks Beach and situated on 60 acres of beach forest. Celebrity chef Ken Oringer chose the spot for his first restaurant outside of Boston—Earth, launched earlier this month—and Cellardoor Winery recently installed a satellite vineyard on the grounds. The rustic-chic complex, complete with daily breakfast baskets, private cottages, screened porches, a tree-house spa and outdoor yoga classes, keeps visitors content on the grounds.

In town, the White Barn Inn offers a different vision of luxury—more claw-footed bathtub than famous clan at their regular haunt (and Rachael Ray favorite) Mabel's Lobster Claw, which offers simple but exceptional seafood. For uncooked crustaceans, take a trip on the mahogany-planked lobster boat Rugosa, which runs tours along the Kennebunk River and the seal-and-wildlife-dotted coast.

A definite stop should be Old Salt's Pantry, an informal takeaway shop specializing in breakfast sandwiches and lobster rolls. And before the drive home, don't miss H.B. Provisions, where you can buy local delicacies like cinnamon-blueberry coffee cake and wild beach plum jelly to tuck into your suitcase. ✱ outdoor beach shower—culminating in executive chef Jonathan Cartwright's nine-course tasting menu. It's an easy walk from there to Gooch's Beach and the town center, where some of the state's best boutique shopping can be found in Dock Square. IT'S NOT A COINCIDENCE that you recently burned through Mamma Mia! on Blu-ray—your subconscious is telling you it's time for a Grecian getaway. Athens has history, but anybody (and a lot of nobodies) aiming to become a dancing queen among the queens heads to Mykonos. The Cycladic island is a playground for celebrities and Tara Reid, but if you can't swing the airfare, we suggest heading to Massachusetts' own sin-city: Provincetown. The 90-minute journey from the Seaport isn't quite the same as ferrying from Santorini, but there's a stocked bar aboard the Provincetown III, and Metaxa looks innocent in a water bottle.

P-town isn't all drag queens and leather nights... you'll also find video bars, cruise spots and tea dances! Sarcasm aside, the 9.7-square-mile village at the end of the Cape is rich with theater, food and art. Populated by outcasts in the early 1900s, the town promotes an all-inclusive atmosphere that it backs up by offering something for everybody.

Though there are a few bigger hotels, Provincetown's bed and breakfasts are the popular choice for visitors. Situated directly beneath the only-slightly-phallic Pilgrim Monument, Gabriel's at the Ashbrooke Inn is well-appointed and within walking distance of both ends of town. Freshly baked cookies in the afternoons are a sweet touch after day-drinking or lounging on the beach.

The town lacks flashy luxury, but it boasts miles of galleries and oddball boutiques for the well-heeled. Mandates allow sidewalk and tag sales twice annually—at the beginning and end of the summer—so plan your trip accordingly if you're looking to stock up on housewares from shops like Roots Home & Garden or Chadington's, or duds from Coffey Men or Rogues Gallery.

Like any beachside destination, restaurants range from clam shacks to high-end bistros. Locals take their food very seriously, emphasizing fresh catches and native flavors. The newest Ten Tables incarnation puts Boston's stamp on the scene; if lauded restaurateur Krista Kranyak eats here, so should we. Across town, Victor's plates up shareable portions of tender braised short ribs and lobster potstickers. Generously spiked cocktails will set the standard for the rest of your night.

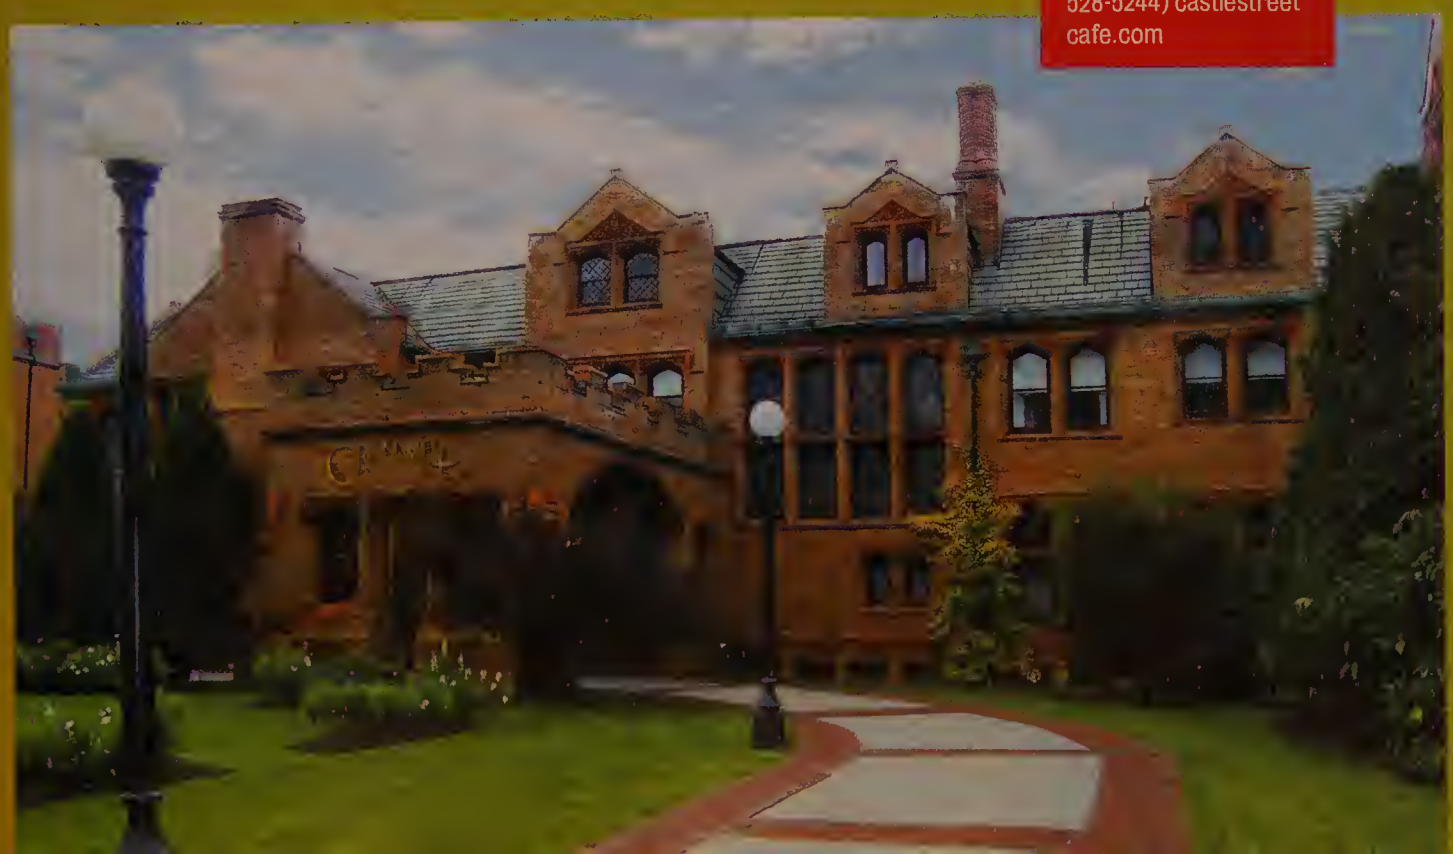
P-town certainly lives up to the party-place reputation it's earned over the years, but theater and film festivals (one weekend already brought Up in the Air actress Vera Farmiga and Black Swan director Darren Aronofsky to town) mean there's a lot more to do than drink and dance. For a low key evening, check out veteran cabaret crooner Bobby Wetherbee at the mammoth Crown & Anchor. The piano man parks it in their Cabaret Room most nights performing show tunes... and maybe even a few ABBA standards. ✱

LENOX MAY LACK THE grandeur of "the Capital of the Alps." While vast in number, Western Mass. galleries don't have the same stature. Tanglewood and the rest of our classical music scene shall be defended until our shoulders burst through the seams of our suit jackets, but we concede that Italy holds all the history. If what you're after, however, is a vigorous hike and some good cheese, the Berkshires have all you need.

For an opulent start, check in at Cranwell, a sprawling campus designed by Frederick Law Olmstead of Emerald Necklace fame. The resort began as a solitary home in the Gilded Age, back when a stone-and-stained-glass structure large enough to host a Civil War reenactment was referred to as a "cottage." Nowadays, there's an 18-hole golf course and 35,000-square foot spa. But your exotic-date-and-wild-honey buff must be earned.

Twenty miles north stands Mount Greylock, the tallest peak in Massachusetts. A trip to the summit and the Massachusetts Veterans War Memorial Tower gives hikers soaring views and the chance to spot birds with amusing names, like the Yellow-bellied Sapsucker or Red-breasted Nuthatch. Rich Woller, president of Greylock Discovery Tours, recommends a ramble along the Hopper and Money Brook trails. "It's a get-away-from-it-all kind of hike," says Woller.



Afterward, a martini—with Berkshire Mountain Distillers' Greylock gin—at the nearby Mezze Bistro + Bar would mark a civilized end to the day's outdoor adventures. Partnered with dozens of community purveyors, Mezze can fortify you just as well as the Alpine taverns slinging wild boar and agnolotti. For rugged Bostonians, there's East Mountain Farm smoked ham steak with mutton kielbasa hash and a 60-minute Mighty Food Farm egg. These are heartening local flavors enjoyed on a beautified Williamstown plot, perhaps best paired with a Dolcetto D'Alba or Barbera D'Asti.

CASTLE STREET CAFÉ 10 Castle St., Great Barrington (413-528-5244) castlestreetcafe.com

Peak-baggers can trek 30 miles south of Lenox to Mount Frissell, the apex of Connecticut. But for a more scenic, luxurious expedition in the dirt, stop by Rubiner's for provisions before making the brief scramble to nearby Bash Bish Falls. The falls, the highest in Massachusetts, draw their name from a romantic Native American legend, something to discuss with a fellow attractive, sweaty hiker over sheep's-milk cheese and house-made pâté.

In the evening, head to the Castle Street Café (next door to the Mahaiwe Performing Arts Center, should you want to end a weekend in the woods with a staging of Handel's Acis and Galatea). Chef Michael Ballon's menu is, of course, pastoral in approach, but he'll thank you not to make a fuss. "We were farm-to-table before that phrase existed," he says. "What makes the Berkshires stand out is 20 years ago, all our restaurants were doing that."

Mind Matters

TED'S EXCELLENT ADVENTURES

NOTHING COULD BE further from the sensible shoes mundanity of an academic conference than TEDx-Boston. This third annual summit of some of the city's most brilliant minds begins June 28 at the Seaport World Trade Center, and features speakers like Dr. Bo Pomahac, the director of Brigham and Women's Burn Center, and Lisa Gross, an artist whose current project involves planting apple trees around the city. From a discussion about developments in the Human Genome Project to a presentation on a smartphone app that scans your eyeballs, the local edition of TED is a reminder of why we're the intellectual hub of the universe.

The Art of Getting By ★ This is the kind of indie movie that makes you hate indie movies. Insufferable Freddie Highmore (all grown-up since Finding Neverland) stars as George, a mop-headed teenager prone to reading Camus in the cafeteria and wearing long black trenchcoats. George has decided that since we'll all eventually die, there's no point in doing homework. What's obnoxious about The Art of Getting By is that it takes George's existential plight seriously. The school's supposedly unattainable beauty (Emma Roberts) tries to seem dangerous by smoking cigarettes but practically begs the young nerd to have sex with her. The film amounts to a pathetic game of narcissistic role-play in which a not particularly talented director (Gavin Wiesen) reimagines his own fan-fiction version of high school, because now he's got enough connections to enlist some semi-famous people and Steven Spielberg's weird-looking daughter to play all the bit parts. Just because it happened to you doesn't make it interesting. (At Kendall Square and Embassy Cinema)

Cave of Forgotten Dreams ★★★ "We were here," those Paleolithic folks might well have scrawled on the walls of France's Chauvet cave some 30,000 years ago. The ever-eccentric documentarian Werner Herzog examines the oldest known example of early man seeking to record his experiences. Sealed in limestone and forbidden to visitors save for a few four-hour windows during the day, it's an archaeological treasure-trove that the filmmaker uses as a jumping-off point for cosmic musings. Shot in 3-D, the movie explores the Chauvet cave and highlights the ridiculous restrictions foisted on Herzog's team when they set out to film it. In his effort to capture these early paintings, the director had to rely on a hand-held light source and the sparsest collection of camera gear. I'm not normally a fan of 3-D, but will make an exception for the odd contours of these ancient surfaces. What captivates the filmmaker—and his zeal is contagious—is witnessing early man's attempt at visual expression. Herzog's schticky and altogether delightful narration describes these illustrations as precursors to cinema. (At Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Fast Five ★★★ The most awesomely stupid and stupidly awesome movie I've seen in ages, this fifth installment in the apparently never-ending automotive porn series sends the entire gang to Rio and reunites almost every not-dead player from the entire franchise to pull off an Ocean's Eleven–style heist on a Brazilian crime lord. Bloated and egregiously overlong, director Justin Lin's spectacle piles on one insane set-piece after another, culminating in a symphony of mass destruction that violates every law of physics with bravura showmanship. It was a brilliant move to bring in Dwayne Johnson as a nemesis, since he and Vin Diesel look like 'roided-out, bald doppelgängers competing to out-testosterone one another. It's all very sweaty, homoerotic and violent, but then I've always been a sucker for this sort of musclehead naïveté. Lin is one of the few guys working who can make gargantuan action sequences spatially comprehensible, and for all its goofiness, the picture's climax had me kicking my feet with joy. (In the suburbs.)

The Hangover Part II ★ ½ Second verse, same as the first—except this time without any of the funny parts. Most of what made director Todd Phillips' raunchy, 2008 original such a beloved blockbuster was the thrill of discovery. At heart a detective story, the tale of three henpecked suburbanites retracing their steps after a bachelor party benefited from an unfamiliar cast and surprising situations. This unnecessary sequel slavishly follows that exact formula almost scene for scene, upping the ante with gross-out squalor and an air of violent unpleasantness, while remaining almost entirely devoid of wit. This time Bangkok stands in for Vegas, there's a monkey instead of a baby, the missing tooth is replaced by a facial tattoo and the prostitutes… well, don't ask. Much like Mike Myers' dreaded Austin Powers sequels, it trots out all the jokes you laughed at last time and beats them like a dead horse. Shockingly well-staged and expertly photographed by people who really should know better, it's a cynical, ugly cash grab. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jane Eyre ★★ There have been at least 12 big-screen adaptations of Charlotte Brontë's 1847 novel, as well as another dozen or so made for TV. Is there anything more we can gain from yet another couple hours with Jane and Mr. Rochester? Director Cary Joji Fukunaga's take is respectful, for the most part adequate and, as far as I can see, has no compelling reason to exist. Fukunaga attempts to shake up the text

GAY OLD TIME

This autobiographical story is a series of false starts.

Beginners ★★
Starring Ewan McGregor, Christopher Plummer, Mélanie Laurent, Mary Page Keller and Goran Visnjic. Written and directed by Mike Mills. At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.

Andrew Tepper

WRITER-DIRECTOR Mike Mills' strangely skittish but heartfelt sophomore effort begins with a fascinating premise: following the death of his wife, a stuffy, 75-year-old retired museum curator (Christopher Plummer) abruptly tells his son that he's gay, and proceeds to spend the last four years of his life living it up, "exploring this side of myself I have never allowed."

Oh, what a movie that could have been. There are sidelined fragments of a greater picture. Freewheeling across a fractured narrative structure, with more than a passing nod to the French New Wave, Beginners offers tantalizing glimpses of the past. Unfortunately we remain mired mostly in the present, with Ewan McGregor playing the depressed young son, disposing of his now-deceased father's personal effects, filing for death certificates, adopting the old man's cloyingly cute Jack Russell terrier and generally bumming out the party. And what a party it might have been, judging from these brief, early glimpses.

I will confess, I have an absurd affection for elderly gays. Granted, it's inherently sad and awful that so many have had to spend much of their lives straitjacketed by backwards societal codes and browbeaten by unimaginable pressures. But what a joy it has been (at least in this part of the country) to watch America finally start to get it together and allow people to be who they really are, in public. A great departed friend and mentor of mine used to cheerfully say: "I'm on the last lap, Sean. I have no more secrets."

Plummer's Hal is an extraordinary creation. After decades denying his true self, suddenly this sly old fox is liberated in a matter-of-fact fashion. (He's dryer than a martini and opens his shirts an extra couple of buttons.) Ever since his military stint in The Sound Of Music, Plummer has played both sides of the table, and here his conspiratorial eyes hint at something larger than the dull film going on around him. He's the only reason to see Beginners, and brings with him a disruptive energy that I worry makes director Mills extremely uncomfortable. Although he's the most interesting character, Hal is banished to the sidelines almost immediately.

Mills—a talented music-video director who transitioned to feature films—based this picture upon his own life. Unfortunately, he wrote it himself, so instead of the fascinating story of a man finally embracing his sexuality, we've got a lot of movie to slog through in which Ewan McGregor plays a sad-sack stand-in for the director himself. He drives a BMW, writes twee cartoons about "the history of sadness" and mopes around because he can't get over the notion that his father was queer and his mother knew it the whole time. With quick, often-amusing bursts of interrupted scenes that never quite finish, the film apes the energy and discursive style of Truffaut's Shoot The Piano Player. Yet in the end, Beginners never goes anywhere.

In the movie's attempt at a love story, McGregor, dressed as Freud for an annoying, middle-aged Halloween party, meets Mélanie Laurent's gamine goddess. As if things weren't already precious enough, he's wearing a fake beard and she's suffering from laryngitis, scribbling banter on a pad of paper and gazing into the camera with those giant doe eyes. Their relationship plays out like a bad parody of a Charlie Kaufman movie, both of them trumpeting affectations until you wonder if there's anything left beneath the hipster posturing.

Still, the movie sometimes surprises. Time here is nothing if not fluid, and off-hand flashback interludes erupt to detail McGregor's late mother hiding her half-Jewish heritage in America. Revisited in stray moments, with one eye on the pathos, her secret shame rivals her husband's, and maybe that's what made them such a good match way back when. But eventually, the emotional history and fascinating cross-cultural minutiae boils down to the handsome Jedi wondering if the hot French chick wants to have sex with him.

Mills needs to look up from the lint that's collected in his navel. He's a clear talent behind the camera, but there's not a lot of story here. ✖✖✖ with some rough-hewn naturalism, fixating on the Derbyshire landscapes and overplaying the miserable weather. The shots are handheld and often underexposed, announcing from the outset that this isn't your mom's Jane Eyre. Except it really is. Once you look past the shaky-cameras and ugly costumes, there's nothing new. Luckily, Michael Fassbender is there to liven things up as the moody Rochester. Wearing unfortunate, pubic-looking sideburns, this wry Irish actor plays up the character's lazy contempt for everyone in his company. But Mia Wasikowska's Jane just blandly stands around, suffering from Fukunaga's ugly natural lighting and deliberately drab color scheme. (In the suburbs.)

Midnight in Paris ★★★ ½ I know. Everyone always tells you that the new one is Woody Allen's comeback film. I've been burned by that rap, too. But this is a lighter-than-air, casually profound piece that calls to mind The Purple Rose of Cairo in its magical realism and ruefully funny undercurrents. Owen Wilson stars as a hack Hollywood screenwriter vacationing in Paris who finds himself magically transported to the 1920s, where he boozes it up with Ernest Hemingway, F. Scott Fitzgerald and Adrien Brody's hilariously self-infatuated Salvador Dalí. The punchline comes early: While Wilson was always pining for "the good old days," once he gets there, he discovers that everybody else shares his longing. Gorgeously shot by cinematographer Daris Khondji and directed by Allen with a care we haven't seen in eons, it's a deceptively slight exploration of nostalgia as beautiful quicksand. The only thing keeping this from being a classic is Allen's typically misogynistic treatment of Rachel McAdams' character. Otherwise, it's lovely. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Pirates of the Caribbean: On Stranger Tides ★★ Um, did anybody ask for this? Truth be told, the fourth installment in this overlong series, based on an eight-minute theme-park ride, isn't a particularly terrible movie. Whereas director Gore Verbinski's first three chapters frustratingly buried genuine visual wit and flights of imagination beneath labyrinthine legends and nonsense, director Rob Marshall's maiden voyage at the helm is skimpy and almost defiantly pedestrian. It's just not interesting enough to get angry about. Yes, Johnny Depp is back as Captain Jack Sparrow, our perpetually blotto, cowardly anti-hero. In the first, Pirates: Curse Of The I Forget What It Was Called, Depp's effeminate sashaying and slurred speech felt like a grand, delightful act of sedition within an otherwise stodgy Disney product. But familiarity breeds contempt, and there's not really enough of a character here to justify yet another trip back to this same shallow well. There's no sense of scope or grandeur in this iteration; everybody is just punching a time clock and setting up the next sequel. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Super 8 ★★ Proving you can mimic a visual signature without understanding any of the reasons why it's successful, writer-director JJ Abrams fashions a slavishly nostalgic tribute to Steven Spielberg films of the late '70s and early '80s. Cribbing entire shot-lists from Close Encounters and E.T., Super 8 tells the tale of kids from broken homes trying to make a zombie movie, when a train accident suddenly frees a ferociously disappointing alien. Abrams nails all his mentor's patented slow-dolly shots toward characters gazing upwards in wide-eyed wonder, but he's lacking Spielberg's sense of magic—not to mention his storytelling efficiency. Super 8 doesn't make much sense and lacks momentum. Plot complications are arbitrary and so easily reversed, you could probably remove any given reel of the film without altering the outcome. Saving it from complete disaster is young Joel Courtney as a lovestruck movie nerd, and an amazing turn from Elle Fanning as the heartsick gal of his dreams. The rest is bad karaoke. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

13 Assassins ★★★ ½ The prolific Takashi Miike is known as the bad-boy of extreme Asian cinema, so the shock (and delight) of his latest work is that it's a classic samurai adventure. The ghost of Akira Kurosowa looms large over the proceedings, setting a ragtag band of noble ronin out to dispose of the shogun's sadistic heir. Miike's clean frames and elegant compositions are an obvious homage to the master, but oddly there are even more DNA samples from Sam Peckinpah's The Wild Bunch—my personal favorite movie of all time and perhaps the reason why this film hit such a sweet spot. Of course, it can only end one way, and Miike does not disappoint. The final 45 minutes consist of a single, astonishingly staged set piece in which a very unlucky Podunk farm town becomes an elaborate booby trap for the baker's dozen versus what appears to be the entire Japanese army. Also, five words: Flaming oxen used as weapons. (At the Brattle Theatre.)

Thor ★★ Marvel Films' construction of a bridge to nowhere moves forward with another mega-budget prequel laying laborious groundwork for next summer's The Avengers. This time we've got Chris Hemsworth as the arrogant Norse god of thunder, banished to Earth by his father (a never-hammier Anthony Hopkins) to learn a little humility. At first glance, Kenneth Branagh would seem an odd choice to direct a superhero movie, but as the oddball cast prances around the gaudy realm of Asgard in chintzy armor, it's endearing to watch him attack this junk material like it's another one of his Shakespeare adaptations. Hemsworth has a hearty charisma, and the movie's mildly amusing midsection plays like a Viking version of Crocodile Dundee. Asgard's tacky production design owes a debt to Mike Hodges' kitsch classic Flash Gordon, but the guy next to me said it reminded him of a Vegas bathroom. The problem is there's no real weight to any of this stuff. Even the hammer looks like a plastic toy. (In the suburbs.)

The Tree of Life ★★★ ½ "Other people make movies; Terrence Malick builds cathedrals," my brilliant colleague Matt Zoller Seitz is fond of saying. This dream project for the director, some 30 years in the making, feels like the ultimate expression of Malick's particular worldview. With even the title flirting with self-parody, the picture seeks to reconcile one child's troubled upbringing in the 1950s with the entire history of the universe. It is by turns rapturous, astonishing and occasionally silly. I adore the ambition and am in awe of the accomplishment, even if I'm still not sure it all hangs together. Taking the form of a whispered prayer to a God who may or may not be listening, the fractured narrative unspools in symphonic movements. But after one viewing, I'm still not convinced that Malick is quite able to reconcile the quotidian with the cosmic. His final, surreal sequence on a mystical beach is unfortunate. But good heavens, the film is a wonder to behold. Malick's reach exceeds his grasp—but that is one hell of a reach. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Mark Schafer

Win Win ★★★ Writer/director Thomas McCarthy, known for Sundance smashes like The Station Agent and The Visitor, doesn't have a lot of challenging ideas up his sleeve. As far as I can tell, he takes a gimmicky construct and casts it wisely, drawing out fresh performances from underused actors by playing to their strengths in endearing showcase roles. There really isn't anything wrong with the formula. McCarthy's latest stars Paul Giamatti as a schlubby high school coach who accidentally ends up being foster-father to a solemn wrestling prodigy with abandonment issues. Ethical knots abound, paying lip service to troubled times in recession-addled New Jersey, but Win Win truly takes flight whenever it becomes a true underdog sports movie—scoring big laughs from simple three-shots of Giamatti, Jeffrey Tambor and the never-not-funny Bobby Cannavale as beleaguered coaches of the worst wrestling team in the Garden State. McCarthy doesn't ever get a handle on his tale's courtroom histrionics, but the lovable characters and genre payoffs make it a pleasure nonetheless. (In the suburbs.)

X-Men: First Class ★★ ½ Opting for a top-to-bottom reboot after the dreadful Wolverine, Marvel Comics' most allegory-friendly franchise sets the wayback machine to the early 1960s for this diverting, if pointless, prequel. A surprisingly credible James McAvoy plays the young psychic Professor Charles Xavier, while movie-star in the making Michael Fassbender fills in for Ian McKellan as the embittered Holocaust survivor Magneto. Cobbled together from several different scripts and sped into production on a truncated 10-month schedule, X-Men: First Class is a rush-job that has a few moments good enough to make you wish the entire film was better. Helmed by Kick-Ass director Matthew Vaughn, with his camera set to maximum leer, the movie revels in Playboy Club fashions and scantily clad coeds. Suffering from a severe case of overcrowding, First Class doesn't even get around to the obligatory training montage until over 90 minutes into the picture. By the time everyone is done introducing themselves, it's already time for the climactic action scene. Should a sequel be in the cards, a little patience would go a long way. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

COUNTRY TIME

K.D. Lang revives and refreshes her unique take on twang.

K.D. Lang plays the South Shore Music Circus on July 9.

SHE CUTS HER OWN HAIR. "I can only do one style," K.D. Lang says of her famously short coif. "I also think it's very traditional. When you think of Kitty Wells or Porter Wagoner or Johnny Cash, they had the same hair all the time, and that's kind of cool."

Though she name-checks those country icons when it comes to her cut, the Canadian singer hasn't always stuck to tradition when it comes to her music and persona over her quarter-century-long career.

After a kitschy cowpunk start followed by a shift into torch songs and adult-contemporary pop, Lang comes full circle with a spunky yet sophisticated blend of country and rock on Sing it Loud. It's her first album with a band since recording with her '80s outfit, the Reclines.

"It was truly the most joyful and highly condensed creative period that I've ever experienced," the 49-year-old singer says of recording sessions with her Siss Boom Bang band. "We worked really hard all day long and then at the end of the night, we'd have some beers and listen back and just dance and hang out."

They made the album at the Nashville, Tenn. studio of producer Joe Pisapia, who left Boston favorites Guster to become Lang's musical director. "I felt an immediate connection to him," says the singer, who split lyric-writing responsibilities with Pisapia. "It was just a real fun game of ping-pong. There were no editors, no judgment."

She also thrived on recording the album "off the floor" or without relying on overdubs. "It was like performing live," Lang says from her Los Angeles home. "Records have always been a marketing tool or advertisement for what I really do, which is to be on stage. I love the immediacy of having to be on target. It's not really getting into the craft so much as capturing the creativity."

It's easier to be on target when you have a naturally stunning voice like Lang's, introduced to most on "Crying," a 1987 Roy Orbison duet that led to her first of four Grammy Awards. "I was in a Roy mood when I was doing this record," she says. "There was a certain silent strength and stance that Roy exuded."

Lang has something of a reputation as an interpretive singer, which stems from 1988's country-standards cache Shadowland through 2004's Hymns of the 49th Parallel, a collection of covers from Canadian songwriters that includes her take on songs as disparate as Leonard Cohen's "Hallelujah" and Joni Mitchell's "A Case of You."

On Sing it Loud, Lang changes up a Talking Heads classic. "I always thought 'Heaven' would sound really good as a straight-ahead country song." Lang says. But, she clarifies, "To my idea, anything with steel guitar is country."

Lang grew up in the prairielands of Alberta, the youngest of four children, three of them gay. "In a small town, everyone's different because you know them so intimately," she says. "I always took a great sense of pride in being different, and my parents raised me with the confidence to be an individual."

Besides family piano lessons, Lang loved to sing in the reverb of empty hockey rinks and churches, sure of her career path. She listened to Maria Muldaur, Rickie Lee Jones, Kate Bush and jazz singers Carmen McRae and Peggy Lee. Then, in her early 20s, she fell for country idol Patsy Cline. "That's when I got hit upside the head with the whole concept of K.D. Lang and the Reclines and mixing punk with country."

Trading kitsch for the lush textures of her 1992 gem Ingenue, Lang hit a creative and commercial peak, though her image around Nashville had soured over her vegetarian activism even before she went public about her sexuality. "I had kind of exhausted my quota of controversial airtime," Lang says. "By the time I came out, everyone was kinda sick of talking about me. So it worked out."

She's charmed many audiences since, in venues from Olympic stadiums to intimate theaters like the South Shore Music Circus, Cape Cod Melody Tent and the Music Hall in Portsmouth, N.H., her three area stops in early July. "It's kind of stretching the veteran muscles," she says of performing in smaller venues. "It keeps the band fresh, and it keeps me fresh." ×××

On the Nose

Double Vision Brooklyn indie pop duo Matt and Kim perform at the House of Blues on June 30. The musical coupling—both on and off stage—between Matt Johnson (vocals/keyboard) and Kim Schifino (drums/vocals) formed in 2004, but it was five years before the two gained notoriety with the success of their feel-good single "Daylight." The duo's newest tracks include infusions of punk and hip-hop; their latest single, "Block After Block," sounds equal parts LMFAO and Sufjan Stevens. The fusion of music styles means a diverse listening audience, so show night will no doubt bring a crowd of angsty suburban teens bumping elbows with Allston hipsters. Jeffrey Cattel

Celebrating 20 Years

Museums & Galleries

Elevated Stature

Up in the Air Artist David Palmquist's exhibition at the Bromfield Gallery reaches for new heights. Inspired by his "predilection for order" and his desire to experience places representationally, Palmquist has created Satellite Images, a collection of paintings that transform snapshots from TerraServer and Google. In his creative reimagining, urban landscapes become computer circuitry, while interstate cloverleaves are cells in a petri dish. Experience his strange new world through June 25.

KEYED UP

I'd Pay to See That, Too

F. Scott Fitzgerald was wrong when he said, "There are no second acts in American lives" (just ask the cast of Celebrity Apprentice). And no one disproves that theory more than Condoleeza Rice.

Last time I saw her, she was getting into or out of a helicopter, looking super-serious as secretary of state. Next thing I know, an invitation arrives to see her play the piano in a concert at the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library and Museum, to raise money for the Forsyth Institute and Classics for Kids Foundation.

So sue me. I never got the memo that in between childhood and running the country's foreign policy, she had trained to become a concert pianist. I haven't read her memoir.

But plenty of people who have were there, clutching copies of the book to be autographed, as guests filed from the cocktail reception into Smith Hall to have their pictures snapped with her. She was then accompanied by world-renowned cellist Michael Reynolds in a program of Bach, Brahms and Schumann, and I may not be the world's most discerning judge, but she played beautifully. (It was also a relief to learn that the knitted brow she wore throughout Dubya's tenure didn't have anything to do with him; she does it while playing the piano, too).

Among the worthies on hand to witness the show were City Hall denizens Tom Menino and Cecily Foster with their respective spouses, Angela and Paul, real estate mack daddy Arthur Winn and the stunning Alicia, the super-social John and Shelley Keith, über-philanthropist Don Rodman, high net worth guru Robyn Redfield, and so on and so forth.

Following the concert, an elegant dinner was served in the Pavilion, and the general consensus seemed to be that it was an altogether exceptional evening. As one guest put it: "What're they gonna do for an encore? Have Hillary Clinton and Madeleine Albright mud-wrestle?"

Wasn't That on an Episode of Will & Grace?

If you're ever dying to find a glass of white wine, the Design Center is a safe bet, since they always seem to be hosting a reception for some worthwhile thing or another.

Recently, this turned out to be the Women's Lunch Place, which presented a display of artwork by its clients (homeless and low-income women and children), some of which frankly was better than the objects the decorators in the surrounding showrooms fob off for a fortune.

Present and accounted for: the boyish and holding Tylden Dowell, bio-tech babe Jennifer Kim, the relentless Shawn McBride and his other half, drily wry Daron Manoogian, international activist Doris Yaffe, piano-playing hottie Cameron Stowe, Community Servings sex-kitten Tim Leahy, and one man who said, "You say I have good taste like it's an accusation," to which his friend responded: "You're allowed do that at the Design Center."

Turnaround's Fair Play

The World Trade Center always seems a bit cavernous for a party, but not when the guest list tops 1,000, which was the case at the 20th annual Voices & Visions gala to benefit the New England Home for Little Wanderers.

The theme was "Cultures of the World," and the artwork done by children served by the agency gave it an Epcot Center vibe, with everything from hieroglyphics to modern graffiti on display. There was also a silent auction so big you would have had to forego everything else at the party to take it all in. During cocktails, guests could hobnob with the likes of CEO Joan Wallace-Benjamin and her handsome, high-powered lawyer husband, Milton, the evening's honorees, Coldwell Banker head Rick Loughlin and Walgreen's exec Stephen Pemberton, and pretty much everyone who works at their respective companies, which made for an interesting dynamic—all the brokers trying to work the pharmacy big shots to see if they were in the market for real estate.

The evening's Wonder Woman award goes to WCVB beauty Liz "Never Let 'Em See You Sweat" Brunner, the evening's emcee, who made it there from the TV station by the skin of her teeth. An accident on the Mass Pike made her so late that she leapt from her car to the stage in two strides of her stilettos, looking as poised and composed as a beauty pageant contestant and later joining the Voices of Renaissance Choir in a song.

The funniest part of the whole thing: Before leaving the station, her driver had checked with the traffic helicopter, which leads me to believe that the pilot was trying to get back at Brunner for all the snowstorms she warned him about this winter. ×××

DROPS IN HOLLAND BECOME PINTS IN AMERICA.

The people of Holland craft a mighty fine brew, that's why every drop of Heineken is taken straight from Amsterdam. Every. Single. Drop. And if these pints could talk, well, we'd need someone who spoke Dutch.
